FOREWORD

Clubs is the 15th volume to appear in the Traditional and Customary Practices series published by the Bureau of Arts and Culture. These booklets have been produced in Palauan since 1995 with English translations of the Palauan text published since 1998. The information in this booklet has been collected during the course of 10 day-long meetings with the Palau Society of Historians. It represents the living memory of elders and culture-bearers nominated from each of Palau's 16 states and appointed for life by the President of the Republic of Palau. The information is tape-recorded and transcribed, with the written transcriptions read aloud to the historians and amended as needed line by line. This process is done entirely in Palauan and transcribed later into English. A total of four months was spent conducting background research, interviewing elders on a one-to-one basis, and verifying research results with the Society of Historians.

As in the other series volumes, this booklet does not attempt to present the entirety of available data on the subject. It is instead presents a summary overview based on the living memory of the Society of Historians and should be considered as an introduction and starting point for those interested in traditional club organizations and their roles in the community. Readers who wish to follow up with more in-depth studies should consult the bibliography appended to this volume.

The information in this booklet is drawn from life-experiences of Palauan culture bearers many of whom were raised in the years before the onset of WWII. Some of the ancient ways described in this booklet live on only in the culture of memory, some are still present but disappearing, others are an essential part of Palauan cultural identity. We are grateful to the Society of Historians for helping us more fully appreciate how long-held traditions have evolved into the dynamic mix of ancient and modern that characterizes Palauan life today. In these testimonies and stories, they have left their descendants a valuable legacy that will only become more valuable as time goes on.

CLUBS

Clubs (cheldebechel) consist of people of the same approximate age who are arranged under one leadership. All beluu (villages) in Palau have clubs for men and women. The names of clubs differ from beluu to beluu. Clubs are organized by the dual division system of bitang me a bitang el bai (two half-bai). These two groups come under the first and second kebliil (clans).The same system of organization is used in the rengedel a beluu (allied or satellite village/s).

Club members come from kebliil (clans), telungalek (families), and blai (households). Therefore, the kebliil and blai on the side of the first and the second rubak (chief/s)1 provide men and women to the two clubs, one for each bitang el taoch (half-channel/village duality). Clubs typically do not have mixed membership of men and women. Men have their own organization separate from women and vice versa.

Generally, there were three clubs and three bai (meeting structures) for each bitang el taoch. A club has a leader (mengeteklel) and a supervisor (mtelil). These positions come from the kebliil of the four "corner posts" (saus; four highest clans), and they are called the chemachel (betelnut quid).2 The leaders of the clubs under the first rubak are the chemachel from the first and third blai. The leaders of the

1 Rubak can also be used more generally as a title of respect for an elder male.

2 Chemachel is a term used for the club leaders who belong to the top four kebliil of the beluu. When betelnut is chewed, it helps to relieve fatigue, hunger, confusion, nervousness, and so forth. As leaders of the clubs, these people must face all types of problems and responsibilities which they must perform like chemachel for the club to be successful.

clubs under the second rubak are the chemachel of the second and fourth blai. The supervisor of the clubs under the first rubak is the third rubak while the supervisor of the clubs under the second rubak is the fourth rubak. When war erupts, the third and fourth rubak commit the urrurt (entire body of warriors) to planned war strategies. They lead and maintain the warriors. They are the informants for the first and second rubak. Small differences, however, exist from beluu to beluu due to local principles.

All clubs, from small to large, are ranked in responsibilities. The first club, the largest one, is formed in this manner, the rubak holding teleuechel (lower) titles are divided into half-channels (bitang me a bitang el taoch). Along with some men bearing other titles or names of their blai, these men constitute a club called Klou el Cheldebechel (the large club of men). The female titleholders (rubak el dil) also are divided into half-channels. Along with other older women, they form a club called the Klou el Cheldebechel er a Redil (large club of women).

The second club of women or men consists of adults, generally married, who own homes and have obligations and responsibilities within their blai or kebliil. These organizations of men or women are called Ongerung el Klou el Cheldebechel (second largest clubs). Third, there are clubs of either men or women that are called Kekerei el Cheldebechel (small clubs). Members generally are young men or women, unmarried, without blai responsibilities. The latter are being trained in their responsibilities for blai and buai (public). The small clubs select newborn babies and place string bracelets (kerreel) around their wrists, signifying that when they mature, they will be members of this club. A club on one half-channel cannot put bracelets around the wrists of those from another half-channel.

All clubs, small to large, have responsibilities as follows:

MEN'S CLUBS

The largest men's club

1. They are responsible for all major beluu affairs. They establish, strengthen, maintain, protect and generate programs for the beluu,
2. They supervise all the men's clubs in their hamlet, and
3. They also are responsible to protect and guard the laws and peace of the beluu.

The second largest men's club

1. They protect and guard their village from enemies,
2. They implement activities and supervise all major community projects,
3. They lead and supervise the warriors in protecting and defending their villages, and
4. They assist the other men's clubs.

The third and smallest men's club

1. They teach how to perform the work and other skills relating to the welfare of the beluu to young people,
2. They generally are involved in minor assignments to assist the second club,
3. They protect the beluu in war and in other urgent matters, and
4. They are capable of being warriors.

WOMEN'S CLUBS
The largest women's club

1. They function as protectors and guardians of the women's laws of the beluu and provide for its peace,
2. They are responsible for the major affairs of women in the beluu,
3. They generate, promote, supervise and protect beluu programs, and
4. They supervise the small clubs.

The second largest women's club

1. They are active in implementing women's activities,
2. They promote the economy by klomengelungel (visits to other bai).

The third and smallest women's club

1. They teach how to perform the work and other skills relating to the welfare of the beluu to young people,
2. They generally are involved in minor assignments to assist the second club, but
3. They do not participate in bai visits (klomengelungel).

The clubs from the half-channels have separate work assignments and responsibilities, and work separately. They may combine to work together, with permission of the supervisors and the leaders. These clubs are organized separately but this does not mean they stand in opposition to one another or as enemies to one another. Instead, they exchange praise and appreciation. They compete with one another in improvements and in the advancement of their beluu.

The number of clubs and its members were based on the population of the villages. Leadership composition and roles differed by village as well.

Listed in the tables below are the names of clubs collected from a book written by Dr. Augustin Krämer. Dr. Krämer was a German Ethnographer who visited the Palauan islands during the German Administration. From 1909 to 1910 he and his crew collected and documented Palauan cultures and lifeways which were later published into five books. These books were written in the German language and until now have been largely inaccessible by Palauans. In 2009, the Minister of Community and Cultural Affairs, Ms. Faustina Rehuher-Marugg and related organizations, both from Palau and abroad, were able to solicit funding to translate the five ethnographic books regarding Palau from the German language to the English language. This translation project is scheduled to begin in early 2011.

The club names and related information were then updated by the Society of Historians during their first annual meeting. The Historians also reviewed this publication during their second annual meeting. It was further reviewed by long time members of the Bureau of Arts and Culture Technical Review Committee. The BAC Staff Historian also spoke with traditional club leaders, state governments, and respected elders within states as were available to verify the information concerning village and state clubs.

This booklet lists known traditional clubs for men and women, names of their bai and notes the channel division that individual clubs belong to. The booklet also provides the names of the clubs that exist today, new and old.

The Southwest Island States of Sonsorol and Hatohobei

The cultures of the peoples of Sonsorol and Hatohobei states are distinct from the culture of mainland Palau. Cheldebechel have a lengthy tradition within the mainland Palauan culture, hence the reason the the Society of Historians selected it as the topic for this booklet. The Sonsorol and Hatohobei Historians along with the Bureau of Arts and Culture Staff worked for many months to find something similar within the Southwest Island culture to impart in this booklet. To this end, the BAC staff contacted leaders within those two state communities and two anthropologists who have conducted research in the Southwest Islands.

These community leaders and others provided a range of perspectives. One pointed out that the cultures are different and that, essentially, it can be difficult to find such similarities between two distinct culture groups. However, others pointed out that peoples from Sonsorol and Hatohobei do gather together in groups for many types of activities and functions. Some of what was shared with the BAC staff during this project was that Sonsorol and Hatohobei people today belong to church-based and otherwise-based youth groups, that there were groups that would participate in dance competitions in traditional times, and so forth. These are worthwhile group activities to explore within the Southwest Island culture and there is much to be gained by examining them further. With this project's short time line and the intense process of collecting cheldebechel names nationwide and the even more time intensive process of verifying them with our technical review committee members, current cheldebechel leaders, and available state and village leaders and elders, there was not enough time to pursue this very interesting line of thought further. Time for this project was further used in talking to Sonsorol and Hatohobei Historians, community leaders, and anthropologists who have studied in those places as noted earlier. It is recommended that this topic be explored further in the future.

Note: In the tables below: The capital letter 'M' is used for the largest men's club and the lower-case letter 'm' is used for the second largest and the smallest men's clubs. The capital letter 'F' is used for the largest women's club and small letter 'f' is used for the second largest and the smallest women's club. In the brackets '[ ]' are corrections for club and bai names as provided by Historians and other elders based on their knowledge of these institutions.
