Letter from Karl L. Trever, Chief, Interior Records Section, National Archives to Superintendent Russell A. Gibbs, Chalmette National Historical Park, Regarding Chalmette Monument (57)-(58)

Genealogy of the de Leco de Chalmette Family (59)-(62)

A Briefed Abstract of Title on the Property of New Orleans Terminal Company /Major Portion of the Battlefield Area Property/ (63)-(659)
Introduction
In 1938-1939 the writer, while stationed at Vicksburg National Military Park, Vicksburg, Mississippi, spent approximately a year in research on the Battle of New Orleans preparatory to the development of Chalmette National Historical Park, Louisiana.

On the basis of this experience Superintendent Russell Gibbs requested through the Region One office that the writer be detailed on a special assignment to Chalmette on a reimbursement basis for the period January 13 - February 22, 1951 for the purpose of:

1. Evaluating and recommending revisions of the present marker system of the park.

2. Conducting research on the Rene Beauregard House for information which would assist in a rehabilitation of the building for museum and administrative use.

3. Gathering such information as might prove helpful in the writing of a 48-page handbook for the area.

It was appreciated by Superintendent Gibbs and Regional Historian Appleman that any one of these three subjects might easily employ the full time of the writer. In view of this it was suggested that the chief efforts of the historian be directed to the first two.

It was generally understood that the work schedule should be so arranged as to permit the final preparation of the report prior to the conclusion of the assignment. However this proved impossible due to the absence of any typist assistance at the park and to unavoidable delays encountered in completing special phases of the research such as:

1. The microfilming of the significant portion of the autobiography of James Gallier by the Howard-Tilton Library, Tulane University, New Orleans, La.

2. The photostating of certain documents by the National Archives, New Orleans, La.

3. The photostating of other documents by the National Archives, Washington, D. C. (received May 4).

4. The search of the Beauregard Papers conducted by the staff of Dr. V. L. Bedsole, Head Department of Archives, Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, La. (Completed April 10.)

6. The securing of positive copies of microfilm of abstracts of title of property in and adjacent to the park prepared by the Southern Railroad Company. This was done by Hall in Richmond, Virginia, through the cooperation of Region One.

The progress of the research was materially assisted by the generous cooperation of old friends and new acquaintances, notable among whom may be listed the following:

Mr. Edward Alexander Parsons

Prominent attorney of New Orleans, Mr. Parsons owns what is reputed to be one of the four largest private libraries in the United States - 45,000 volumes, many of which are first editions, and 8,000 manuscripts. His collection of documents relative to the purchase of Louisiana, the Battle of New Orleans, and other phases of early Louisiana history is invaluable.
He has been unfailing in the encouragement and generous support he has given the writer both in early and late research on the area. It was at his invitation last year that the writer addressed the Chalmette National Historical Park Association in New Orleans. It was at his invitation this year that the writer addressed the Louisiana Historical Society on "The Battle of New Orleans in the Light of Newly Discovered Evidence." (See Appendix - Public Relations.)

It was through the cooperation of Mr. Parsons that the writer secured a photostatic copy of a letter of Jackson to Morgan written on the field of battle, dated January 8, 1815. (See Appendix - Miscellaneous.)

Mr. James J. A. Fortier

Mr. Fortier as Assistant Archivist of the Louisiana State Historical Library has offered generous cooperation and valuable assistance in research. Mr. Fortier is a member of a distinguished Louisiana family with a wide circle of acquaintances who were in a position to further the research.

It was through Mr. Fortier's invitation that the writer was guest speaker before the Academy of American History, an up and coming historical society. (See Appendix - Public Relations.)

Mr. Sam Wilson

Mr. Wilson is now associated with the architectural firm of Richard Koch. Mr. Wilson is generally recognized as probably the foremost historical architect in New Orleans. Since 1934 he has shown increasing interest in studying and preserving important historical landmarks in and about New Orleans. He is now serving as President of the Louisiana Landmarks Society, an active organization in the preservation field.

In 1935 Mr. Wilson assisted in the preparation of the HABS drawings of the Rene Beauregard House and has conducted further research on the house since that time. His generous cooperation proved of invaluable assistance to the writer. He very willingly made available to the writer such information as he had on file relative to the house.

Mr. Wilson has conducted an intensive study of the De La Ronde House which he plans to make available to the National Park Service. He was the first to identify a contemporary photograph of the house, a copy of which is attached to this report.

Mr. Wilson has recently edited Latrobe's Diaries and submitted it for publication, probably in the fall under the title "Impressions Respecting New Orleans". Latrobe visited the battlefield of New Orleans in 1820 and made a number of sketches of historical interest including the work on the bastion on the right of Jackson's line near the river. (See Gallier Exhibition Catalogue 1950 compiled by Mr. Wilson - Part III, Beauregard House - Photographs and Documents.)

Dr. V. L. Bedsole

While on a trip to Baton Rouge the writer had the pleasure of meeting Dr. V. L. Bedsole, Head Department of Archives, Louisiana State University. Time did not permit the examination of The Pierre G. T. Beauregard and Family Papers by the writer. However, Dr. Bedsole very generously offered the services of his staff to examine them for us. On April 10, it was learned that the examination had been completed without fruitful results.

Dr. Garland Taylor

Dr. Taylor is Director of Libraries of Tulane University. It was through his courtesy that the writer was permitted to examine the two separate collections of manuscripts of the Gallier Collection. He also supervised for the writer the microfilming of the desired portion of Gallier's Autobiography. He also arranged for the photographing of Laclotte's sketch of the battle of New Orleans.

Miss Renshaw

The writer first had the pleasure of meeting Miss Renshaw when in 1938 he first began his researches on the Battle of New Orleans. At that time she was Assistant Librarian in the Howard Memorial Library. Since then the Howard and Tilton Libraries have combined and she is serving as assistant to Dr. Taylor. Her thorough knowledge of the library almost removes the necessity of a card catalogue.

Mr. Claude C. De Bruyes

Mr. De Bruyes, of distinguished Louisiana ancestry on one side of his house, is a descendant of the pirate Beluche on the other. For years he was employed as a photographer for the Cabildo Museum.

It was through his cooperation that the writer secured the recent photographs of the exterior and interior of the Beauregard House.

Mr. Dan Leyrer

It was through the cooperation of Mr. Dan Leyrer that a number of the best photographs of the Beauregard House was obtained. He also furnished us with a copy of the De La Ronde House, the McCarthy House, and the blown up section of the Zimpel's map.

Dr. George Raffalovich

Dr. Raffalovich well deserves the term "gentleman scholar." Formerly a Professor of Dartmouth University, he served for a number of years after World War I as foreign correspondent in Italy. Later he returned to this country, taught a while in Georgia and then settled in New Orleans. While in Georgia he met Margaret Mitchell and did free lance research for her.

With his ready command of French Dr. Raffalovich was ever willing to assist the writer in the translation of any significant or difficult document in French, whether it was at St. Bernard Court House, the National Archives, or at Baton Rouge.

He is now a frequent contributor to the French Quarter News and is conducting active research in New Orleans genealogy. The Service could profitably keep in touch with him.

Mr. Edwin Roy

Mr. Roy is the editor of "The Bernard Voice" – a local paper of St. Bernard Parish that has been in continuous publication since 1890. Mr. Roy very kindly permitted the writer to examine the old issues of the paper for such light as they might throw on the history of the area. A number of interesting items were found which are attached in the appendix. Of particular interest was the account of the burning of the McCarty House in the issue of February 29, 1896. At that time the house was owned by Henry Beauregard, brother of Rene.

Mr. Roy's grandfather established a brickyard about 1835 which continued in operation until the 1890's when it was purchased to permit the establishment of the present Sugar Refinery. (See St. Bernard Parish Louisiana brochure of early 1900, gift of Mr. Roy -- Part III.)

Mr. William Ricciuti

Mr. Ricciuti, also a prominent architect in New Orleans, is author of an interesting book on historical architecture of the city, entitled New Orleans and its Environs.

In his book Mr. Ricciuti credits Gallier, Sr. with having built the Beauregard House, but was able to offer little or no documentary evidence to prove it. Unfortunately he was ill with the flu at the time arranged for a second interview.
Mr. Sidney L. Villere

Mr. Villere is the great, great grandson of Governor Jacques Villere. He has made a considerable study of the histories of both the Beauregard and the Villere families.

He kindly offered to make transcripts of the genealogy of these two families for the writer, but apparently the pressure of work has not yet permitted him to do so.

Mr. Harnett Kane

Mr. Kane is a popular author of a number of best sellers including "Louisiana Hayride, Natchez on the Mississippi" and "Plantation Parade." Last year the writer had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Kane when he spoke before the Chalmette Historical Park Association. While in New Orleans on his recent assignment the writer again saw Mr. Kane at the Howard-Tilton Library. It was at that time that Mr. Kane stated that he had in his possession a 30-page manuscript of the history of the Beauregard family from one of the descendants of Rene Beauregard. He seemed quite willing to make this material available to the writer providing he could readily locate it in his effects. So far the paper has not been received.

Mrs. Edwin X. DeVergeres

Mrs. DeVergeres is another active family genealogist who has both enthusiasm and talent. She is a direct descendant of Chalmet and is also related to the De La Ronde family. She has really a remarkable collection of manuscripts on early Louisiana history. These should be carefully examined by a representative of the National Park Service. A number of the manuscripts would make good museum exhibits. Once the museum of the park is established it is believed she would make a number of valuable donations.

Through the courtesy of Mrs. DeVergeres the writer obtained a copy of the Chalmette genealogy which is found in the Appendix of this report.

Dr. Bedsole, Head Department of Archives of Louisiana State University kindly volunteered to have his staff examine:

"The PIERRE G. T. BEAUREGARD AND FAMILY PAPERS, (1850-1880) - 1912, 671 items and 106 volumes, includes a story entitled 'Magnolia' by Rene Toutant Beauregard describing the plantation of that name and changes there after the War between the States, which Dr. T. Harry Williams has examined for his study on Beauregard, and other papers of Rene Beauregard consisting of congratulatory messages on his election as judge in 1888; messages of condolence on the death of his father, 1893, correspondence and documents relative to the suit of the Federal government against the Cenas heirs, ca. 1893; letters written by Rene from San Diego, California, in 1899, and his bank books and cancelled checks, 1909-1910. Correspondence with P. G. T. Beauregard is included in the CHARLES E. A. GAYARRE COLLECTION, 1720-(1845-1857) - REYNES AND FAMILY PAPERS, 1744-(1862-1869)-1929, 624 items and 36 volumes, are family letters of that New Orleans family and the Mazureau family who were associated with the Beauregards. The J. FAIR HARDIN COLLECTION, 1718-1939, 2,244 items, 1930-1936, pertaining to historic sites in Louisiana."

Mr. F. H. Thompson

Through the courtesy of Mr. Thompson, Superintendent, Real Estate and Conveyance Southern Railway Building, arrangement was made for the loan of their abstracts of title.
In addition to furnishing pertinent details of construction which would prove useful in a rehabilitation of the Beauregard House, it had been hoped that the investigation would definitely establish the date of construction, the architect and the builder.

It was further hoped that information might be found which would help in reconstructing something of the grounds picture.

On the face of it, such an assignment would not seem particularly difficult. However, investigation revealed that there were a number of factors involved that made it difficult in the extreme. In the first place, all but a small portion of the St. Bernard Court House records were burned in a fire that destroyed the Court House building about 1885. Thus the most likely source of information was to a large extent removed in the beginning. The other chief source was the Notarial Archives located in the New Orleans Court House. Here again the searcher encountered frequent frustrations, for unless one knew the notary and the date he was at a loss to know which volume to examine for any transaction. Frequently there were as many as 80 notaries in a year and each notary's papers would be filed in approximately four volumes for a given year. Though the volumes have been indexed, there is no general index to serve as a guide.

It was through the newspaper files under "Auction Sale" notices that some of the most detailed information was obtained.
concerning the house. Here again, however, there was no index and frequently the file was incomplete.

Research under such conditions was tremendously time-consuming and quite often disappointing. Realizing this, the writer, with but few exceptions, worked at night and through his lieu days in an effort to cover as much ground as possible. Unfortunately, research oftentimes has no reward other than to eliminate another possible source of information.
In summary, among other things, the search resulted in:

1. The establishment of a legal chain of ownership of the Beauregard House property from William Brown in 1808 to its requisition by the National Park Service in 1949. Also abstracts of title for the immediate surrounding properties from 1832 to their purchase by the New Orleans Terminal Railroad in 1904.

2. The discovery of two significant descriptions of the property in contemporary newspaper

Two excellent photographs were discovered showing the house in the 1920's before the ravages of decay had set in. These photographs, which were taken by the well-known photographer, Dan Leyrer, show both wings of the house, the porch railing, trim and shutter detail, and in some instances trees on the front lawn that are now gone.

History of the Rene Beauregard House
History of the Rene Beauregard House

Less than a hundred yards from Jackson's battle line at New Orleans, graced by a grove of picturesque oaks festooned with hanging moss, stands the crumbling ruins of a once proud villa, generally known along the Mississippi plantation coast as the Rene Beauregard House, or Bueno Retiro. Encroachments of time and the river have wrought many changes during the past 35 years of its empty, ghost-like existence — changes both in structure and in setting. Structural changes of natural decay during the past decade have been greatly abetted by wanton vandalism that has left the building all but a shambles. [See Part III - recent photographs pp.XXV-XXXI.]

Relentless too has been the erosive action of the river which has resulted in a continued foreshortening of its once lovely lawn.

Cloaked in a veil of misconception and misinformation, the house has seldom if ever been presented in its true perspective. The date of its construction, the builder, the architect, the chain of legal ownership, and pertinent information relative to the character of the property have remained much of a mystery.

Apparently with the exception of the preliminary investigation of Historian Dawson Phelps in his report of November 18, 1948, and of the more extensive researches of Mr. Sam Wilson, Architect of New Orleans, both of which are in manuscript form, information about the house has followed with monotonous consistency fabrications set forth in a number of newspaper articles by John Coleman published in the 1920's and 1930's. Recent authors have been content to accept these fabrications without question until repeated sufficiently often they have become accepted as truth.

To mystery and romance Coleman added glamor — the magic name of Gallier and a Spanish title, the Marquis de Trava. The date of construction he gave as 1840. The origin of this legend, for such it has become, is a particularly fascinating one. Coleman was no doubt quite sincere in his description of the house and its origin, but on what chain of circumstance, association, and misinterpretation did he base his story. Frequently legend has some basis of fact in part, though the whole may represent a strange distortion of truth.

The Legend of Gallier, the Marquis de Trava and 1840

Something of the manner in which an embryo legend develops may be seen from a reading of Gallier's Autobiography, an examination of the Gallier Manuscript Collection (Tulane University, New Orleans, La.), and an investigation of court records — Notarial Acts of the period.
In view of the repeated statements by Coleman and various authors, including the Architect Ricciuti, that Gallier, Sr., was the architect for the Beauregard House, an examination was made of the Gallier Manuscript Collection at Tulane University in an effort to establish what, if any, connection Gallier, Sr., had with the house.

There are at present two separate collections of Gallier manuscripts at Tulane -- one in the custody of Professor B. L. Pickens of the School of Architecture, and the other in the custody of Dr. Garland Taylor, Director of Libraries. Every courtesy was offered in making these collections available to the writer.

The first of these collections was secured by donation from Mr. Sylvester W. Labrot in December 1948. There are approximately 500 items in this collection, an examination of which revealed nothing that would establish Gallier's connection with the house; nor did the examination of the other collection of some 100 items prove more fruitful.

An excellent presentation of 94 of the most important of the Gallier manuscripts is to be found in the centennial exhibition catalogue prepared by Mr. Sam Wilson, entitled "James Gallier, Architect, An Exhibition of His Work, presented in commemoration of the Centennial of the City Hall by the Louisiana Landmarks Society and the City of New Orleans at the City Hall Lafayette Square New Orleans, November 10-19, 1950." A copy of this catalogue, through the courtesy of Mr. Wilson, accompanies this report. [See Part III, p. 7]

This is an invaluable guide in that it offers an authentic representation of Gallier's work which is so frequently misrepresented in various publications.

In the smaller collection of the Gallier manuscripts there was found an interesting item entitled, "Sketch for a Hotel at Havanna 1840." On pages 37-38 of Gallier's Autobiography there appears a somewhat detailed account of this venture which serves to definitely establish the association of Gallier's name with Spanish nobility:

..."A gentleman calling on me in 1842 stated that while at Havanna, whence he had just returned, an agent of Count O'Reilly had requested of him that, on his return to New Orleans, he would obtain from the architect of the Saint Charles Hotel a plan for a new hotel, which Count O'Reilly intended to have built at Havanna. I replied that without a plan of the ground and the adjoining property I could do nothing. He advised me to go myself to Havanna and see the count, who would give me all the information I might require. I asked whether he considered it worth the trouble to enter upon a business of this kind without having some certainty of compensation for my time and expenses. He replied that Count O'Reilly being one of the richest noblemen of Cuba, he might of course be relied on for fair dealing in anything he should undertake. I therefore decided upon going to Havana, and when introduced to Count O'Reilly, he received me politely, stated his intention to build a large hotel, and directed his agent to procure all the information I might desire. Having obtained this I returned to New Orleans, made out a full set of plans, and specifications in English and in Spanish, and an estimate of the whole cost. Having prepared everything, I set off again for Havana, where, on my arrival, the agent informed me that Count O'Reilly was at his plantation in the country, but would return to town in a few days. It was then the month of May, the rainy season had set in, and I remained at Havana for three weeks in the daily expectation of seeing the count return, but still he did not appear. The agent then said that the roads had become so impassable, he could not say when the count could reach the city. He therefore advised me not to remain any longer at that time, but to leave the plans with him, and he would present them to the count on his return. I did not like the idea of leaving the plans in his possession; so I placed them in the custody of Messrs. Drake and Co. with instructions that one thousand dollars should be placed in their hands for me before possession of the plans should be given to the count, for by that time I had heard many unfavorable reports of the count and of his agent in matters of business.

"I returned to New Orleans, and in a short time wrote to the count respecting the hotel, but he never replied to me. Drake and Co. informed me that on the return of the count they told him they had possession of the plans, and of my instructions as to their delivery; that the count told them he had changed his intention of building an hotel, and should therefore not require the plans at all. After some months had elapsed they sent me back my plans, and I never received any compensation for my labours, loss of time, the expenses of the two voyages to Havana and back, besides time lost in waiting there for several weeks. I had at one time intended to sue the count for compensation of my claims; but was dissuaded from that course by persons who knew how hopeless a thing it was for a stranger to get any compensation through the medium of the law, or the lawyers at Havana, against a wealthy native with unlimited means of defence."

Thus, Gallier's name is linked with Spanish nobility at a significant date - 1840. The association, however, was certainly not a happy one. Gallier's Sketch Plan shows the date as 1840, while his Autobiography shows it as 1842. It will be recalled that 1840 is generally credited in published accounts as the year the Beauregard House was built.

While investigating the Notarial Acts in the progress of preparing an Abstract of Title, a chance discovery revealed that Jose Antonio Fernandez, who purchased the Beauregard House in 1866, made a deposit of registry November 20, 1875 of a sum of $5,000 which represented a donation to Mrs. Carmen Lesseps, his wife, by Juan Fernandez y Lineros in grateful appreciation of courtesies extended him on a visit to New Orleans in 1866. Le Gardeur, Jr. July-Dec. 1875-1876 No. 762.

This document has a number of significant possibilities, for it establishes the fact that Jose Antonio Fernandez had a brother in Havana, Cuba, born in Malaya, residing in the capital, called O'Reilly. Does this offer an important clue as to the identity of the Marquis de Trava?

For sometime Dr. George Raffalovich, genealogist and free lance reporter of New Orleans, has been conducting research in an effort to establish the identity of the Marquis de Trava. From an examination of the New Orleans City Directories from 1886 to 1921 he has found repeated association of the name de Trava with that of Fernandez. Some of the Directory findings include:

1887, Jose A. Fernandez de Trava, prof.
Tulane Uv. 175 Ursulines
1889, Joseph A. Fernandez de Trava, editor El Moro de Pas., res.

1892, Joseph Fernandez de Trava, professor of languages, Francis chemist; both same address

1902, Joseph A. Fernandez de Trava, foreign corresp., 110 Tchoupitoulas res. 1209 Ursulines

Dr. Raffalovich notes: "Apparently he [Joseph Antonio Fernandez] died in 1906, as I found in 1907: Carmen, widow Joseph A. Fernandez de Trava (it's under the 'D' now) res. 1505 N. Prieur."

In 1908 the Directory shows a Mrs. Joseph A. Fernandez res 1570 N. Miro; in 1916, Mrs. J. A. De Trava Fernandez 1570 N. Miro.
The last entry of Mrs. Joseph A. Fernandez was in 1921.

Could it be that Jose Antonio Fernandez never used the title Marquis de Trava because it was the rightful title of his brother, Juan Fernandez y Lineros of O'Reilly, Havana, Cuba? Is there any connection between the Marquis de Trava and Count O'Reilly? Was it a home that Gallier, Sr., was supposed to have built for the Marquis de Trava, or a hotel? From such woofs the fabric of legend is often spun.

The Builder?
The Date of Construction?
The Architect?

It is thus evident that Gallier, Sr., did not build the Beauregard House in 1840 for the Marquis de Trava. Did he build it for anyone else? If so, when? Is it possible to completely disassociate Gallier, Sr., from any connection with the house? Could Gallier, Jr., have been the architect, thus accounting for the persistent association of the Gallier name with the house? When and by whom was the Beauregard House built?

The search for the answers to these questions led through many blind alleys, dead-end streets, and devious by-paths. There is of a certainty no royal highway to investigation. Frequently the less obvious angles of approach proved the most successful. Some of the main paths that the investigation followed led to an examination of Census Records, Notarial Acts, Succession Records, Mortgage Records, Contemporary Newspaper Files, Contemporary Map Files, Records of the Recorder of Births and Deaths, Marriage Records, Church Records, Directories, General Land Office Records, Tax Assessments, Claims — Petitions for Property Damage of War, Published Sources —, Guides to New Orleans, and Photograph and Sketch Files. To these avenues of approach were added interviews with descendants of contemporary families and an examination of all available collections of family papers.

As the investigation proceeded the story gradually began to evolve. Having previously established the ownership of the property in the battlefield area from the Abstracts of Title, it was thought the Census Records might assist in determining what year the property first served as a dwelling. With this purpose in mind, an examination was made of the census for the years 1820, 1830, and 1840 for the names of persons living in the general and immediate locale of the Beauregard property:

It will be noted that neither the census of 1820 nor 1830 shows the property as being inhabited. However, the 1840 census shows it as being occupied by the Widow Baron. Who was the Widow Baron? She was the former wife of Alexander Baron, an attorney of New Orleans. Before her marriage she was Marie Antette Malus, daughter of Guillaume Malus and Marie Magdeleine Parnetier Malus. Guillaume Malus, one of the best known of the New Orleans iron workers, had died in 1822.

On February 28, 1832 Baron was granted full power of attorney by his mother-in-law. Pollock Bk. 42, No. 133. A few weeks later Louis and Hilaire St. Amand, free men of color, offered for sale at public auction 5 lots of the former estate of Ignace DeLine Chalmet. They had acquired this property in 1817 from Pierre Denis De La Ronde, who in turn had obtained it as the result of a suit against the Widow Chalmet.
The Louisiana Courier of March 7, 1832 carried a notice of this sale. The notice, which was discovered by Mr. Sam Wilson, appears as follows:

Louisiana Courier - March 7, 1832

Sales at Auction by J. Le Carpentier & Company

On Friday the 23d inst. at 12 o'clock at Hewlett's Coffee House, will be sold,—10 arpens of the Plantation of Messrs. Helaire and Le St. Amand five miles below New Orleans, and known by the name of Battle Ground. Of these ten arpens six are situated at the upper limit of the plantation on the side of the city—The two first arpens contiguous to the boundary of Mr. Edward Prevost's property, reach only 15 arpens more or less in the depth; and the four other arpens go to 80 arpens in depth. The 4 arpens at the lower limit are contiguous to the plantation of Antoine Bienvenu. They are intitled to the double concession of 80 arpens, and conformably to the act of sale of Mr. Denis de la Ronce, reach as far as Lake Borgne. The sellers do not warrant this prolongation. On the 6 arpens of the upper part is found the line of defence of the American Army in 1815, and on the 4 arpens of the lower part are the four majestic Oaks, where all those who come to visit the field of battle generally end their walk. The proximity of the city, and the improvements of the lower part in commerce and industry, are a sure warrant to capitalists and speculators that they will place their funds advantageously.—Those lots would suit for brickyards, saw-mills, and gardens.

Terms—1/3 at six months, 1/3 at twelve and 1/3 at twenty four months, in approved endorsed paper, with mortgage till paid. The cost of survey and of sales to be paid by the purchasers. The plan will be deposited at the Exchange a few days before the sale.

The rough sketches, prepared by Mr. Sam Wilson and traced by the writer, serve to give some idea of the changing property lines in the Beauregard property area from 1813 - 1832. See Part III p. V.
On April 10, 1832 Baron purchased lot No. 2 of Carlile Pollock Bk. 42, f. 205. See plan by Allou D'Hemcourt of March 15 showing location of the lot. Plan now missing from Act. On May 18, 1833 Widow Malus acquired the property from Alexander Baron (William Boswell, May 1832).

There is nothing to indicate that there was a house on the property at the time of purchase. However, a year later both house and outbuildings are shown on Zimpel's Map of New Orleans. (See Part III, p. VI for blown-up section of map.) It would therefore appear that Baron authorized the construction of the house within a year of the date of purchase either on his own initiative or that of his mother-in-law.

Soon thereafter Widow Malus took up her residence there. At that time Baron and his wife were living in their town house. About a year later he sold his household goods and decided to return to his former occupation of mariner and trader. While he was absent on voyages between New Orleans and Tampico, his wife resided with her mother in St. Bernard Parish. (Inventory C. A. Baron 1836: Succession 1835.)

At first on returning from his voyages Baron "took his abode at the domicile of his (late) mother-in-law the widow Malus in the Parish of St. Bernard." However on his last return he resided in New Orleans where he died, aged 45, without issue, December 5, 1835 "at six o'clock P. M. at the Domicile of Widow Blondeau situated at the corner of St. Ann and Royal Streets."
Claude Alexander Baron was a native of Houfleur, France, Department of Calvados, in the Kingdom of France, legitimate son of Charles Leonard Lebaron. (State of Louisiana, Parish of Orleans, Recorder Births and Deaths Office, the seventh December (1835).)

A few months earlier Widow Malus had died, September 16.

Further indication that the house on lot No. 2 was owned by the Widow Malus is the fact that no mention is made of this property in the succession of Baron. Inheriting the property from her mother, jointly with her brother Francois Malus, Widow Baron continued to reside there for at least the next 15 years.

If the house erected in 1833 for Widow Gillaume Malus is the present Rene Beauregard House, then it can be definitely stated that Gallier, Sr. had no connection with it, for he did not arrive in New Orleans until the later part of the year 1834, at which time James Gallier, Jr. was seven years old. By 1850 James Gallier, Sr. had retired from business because of ill health. (Gallier's Autobiography).

Was James Gallier, Jr. the Architect? Any connection of Gallier, Jr. with the house would be during the period 1856-1866 when the property was owned by his wife's grandmother, Widow Michel Bernard Cantrelle (Caroline Fabre) or in the two years immediately preceding his death in 1868 when the property was in the possession of Jose Antonio Fernandez y Liniers, sometimes known as the Marquis de Trava.

When Widow Cantrelle purchased the property for Francois and Lucien Malus, April 11, 1856, (Amedee Ducatel N.P.), the price $6,300, would indicate that the original house still stood. Apparently Widow Baron was residing there at the time of its purchase. Though she had donated her "undivided half" of the property to Lucien Malus September 29, 1848 (Lucien Herman, N.P.) the census of 1850 shows her as still residing in the house.

It would thus seem evident that the original house stood as late as 1856. Three years before the purchase of the property by Widow Cantrelle, James Gallier, Jr. had married, September 1853, Aglais Villavaso, daughter of Martin Villavaso and Josephine Cantrelle Villavaso, a well known Creole family, highly esteemed by James Gallier, Sr. For a number of years Martin Villavaso, together with his father-in-law, Michel Bernard Cantrelle, had operated a sawmill, known as the Battle Ground Saw Mill, next door to the Beauregard House property, during which time he had pleasant social and business relations with the Galliers. This sawmill was located on lots Three and Four and later Five as shown on d'Hemecourt's plan dated March 15, 1832. Lots Three and Four were purchased at auction by Michel Bernard Cantrelle, April 10, 1832 at a price of $7,300.00 and $7,900.00 respectively.

Only on the assumption that Widow Cantrelle ordered the construction of a new house could James Gallier, Jr. have been the architect of the present house. Certainly if such were the case it would be natural to assume that she would have employed the services of her grandson-in-law, who was then enjoying quite a reputation as an architect in New Orleans.

Did Widow Cantrelle build a new house or did she extensively remodel the original? The answer might be found in a careful examination of the house by a competent architect. Such an examination has been made by Mr. Samuel Wilson and the result of his findings are described in a letter to the writer of January 2, 1952:

". . . The mouldings of all the trim, interior and exterior, is of a heavy late Greek revival character. The plaster mouldings of the column caps are also of the same character. Unless some evidence could be found to show that these details were the result of some later and most thorough renovation, they would definitely date the
the house from the 1850 period, for mouldings and details of this character cannot be found in Louisiana at an earlier date."

Apparently these findings represent the more considered opinion of Mr. Wilson and the writer accepts them as such. It should be pointed out, however, that in 1935, Mr. Wilson, through Mr. Richard Koch, District Officer, Historic American Building Survey in Louisiana, gave the date of the house as 1840. This date was later verified by Mr. Wilson in a letter to Charles E. Peterson, former Regional Architect, National Park Service, dated December 3, 1948: "I think the date 1840 is more nearly correct than that of 1830." It should be further pointed out that the date 1840 was accepted among others, by Scott, W. S., Old Plantation Houses in Louisiana; Ricciuti, William; New Orleans and Its Environs; Smith, J. Frazier, White Pillars; and by Laughlin, Clarence John, Ghosts Along the Mississippi. The latter describes the house as follows:

"Architecturally the house forms another important step in the evolution of Louisiana architecture from the original Colonial style. The great cement-covered brick columns which supplemented the original squattish brick columns below and wooden colonettes above, and then appeared in a single colonnade, are here presented at the next stage of development - a second identical colonnade was erected at the rear of the house. The floor plan is that of the second stage, however, three rooms wide, and one deep, with a hall absent. All the rooms front and rear open onto the galleries."

In 1949 Messrs. Eric Gugler and William Platt, both architects of New York examined the Beauregard House in some detail. Gugler was of the opinion that the house was built prior to the Civil War, possibly in 1830-1840. (Memorandum of former Regional Historian Roy E. Appleman to Superintendent, Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Military Park, Fredericksburg, Va., dated January 5, 1951).
It will be observed from Mr. Wilson's examination that two possibilities exist:

1. The present house was constructed in the 1850's.
2. The present house is of an earlier date, but the mouldings of all of its trim, interior and exterior, would indicate a thorough renovation since 1850.

Let us explore both of these possibilities. During the period 1850-1860 the census evaluation of the property increased from $3,000.00 to $10,000.00. By 1860 Widow Cantrelle had been in possession of the property for four years. Could it be that this increase indicates either the construction by her of a new house or extensive renovation of the old? In either case it might be expected that such construction or improvement would be reflected in the assessment rolls of the Parish. A check of the incomplete rolls revealed that the "Assessment Roll for the Parish of St. Bernard 1861" of "Mme Ve Cantrel" shows "Quantity of Land in Each Tract or Lot and description by boundaries - 15 (acres)" and "Cash Value of all lands and LOTS OF GROUND owned or claimed whether patented or not, with all Houses, Fixtures and Improvements of every kind appertaining thereto, and all Machinery, neat Cattle, Horses and Mules, attached to said land as a farm or Plantation - $3,000." In 1865 the "Cash Value" is shown as $2,500. By 1873, it had increased to 20 acres with an evaluation of $9,000.

The purchase price of the property by Widow Cantrelle, as previously stated, was $6,300.00. This would indicate that the original house stood as late as 1856. The sale price in 1866 was $8,000 (Amadee Ducatel July 5, 1866). The difference - $1,700.00 - would not seem sufficient to support the theory that Widow Cantrelle built a new house even when allowance is made for the deflated property values which resulted from the Civil War. It would seem that the scarcity of materials at this time could well have made new construction sufficiently high to counter balance to a large degree the deflated property values.

It should be further observed that this sum does not necessarily reflect improvements solely to the dwelling house. The increase might well be attributed to the construction of outbuildings or to marked improvement of the grounds such as orchard planting. That numerous outbuildings existed on the property in 1860 may be seen by reference to the Civil War map entitled "Department of the Gulf Map No. 5 Approaches to New Orleans, prepared by order of Maj. Gen. N. P. Banks, Henry L. Abbot Captain and Chief Top Engineers." Unfortunately no assessment roll was found for the year 1850. It is significant, however, that the greatest assessment increase (to the amount of $6,500.00 here found, occurred from 1866-1873 during the first seven years of ownership by Jose Antonio Fernandez y Lineros. It could well be that the possible extensive renovation of the house to which Mr. Wilson refers occurred during this period. Supporting this belief is the fact that at the time of his purchase of the property in 1866 the house had neither a west nor an east wing. Verification of this is found in the auction sale notice published prior to June 28 (see attachment to Act No. 87 Amedee Ducatel Jan.-July 1866, Notary "5 Juillet 1866 Vente de propriete par Madme Caroline Fabre VV Mr. B. Cantrelle & J. A. Fernandez y Lineros) which describes the property as follows:

"A beautiful two-story brick building, slate roofed, containing three rooms on the ground floor, and three on the first story, gallery front and rear, pantry, cabinets, etc. brick kitchen, stables for six horses, carriage house, hay loft, negro quarters, etc., also a splendid orchard containing every variety of rare fruit trees and vegetables, a beautiful flower garden, containing the choicest plants to be found."
There is a definite possibility that between 1866-1873 the west wing was added and that the house was given a rather thorough renovation. It would seem logical to assume that if this work had been done within this period it would have been begun shortly after its purchase. If done prior to 1868 it is quite possible that James Gallier, Jr. was employed as the architect.

The addition of a wing and even a rather thorough renovation of the dwelling would hardly seem to justify an increased assessment of $6,500.00. Further investigation revealed that a considerable portion of this increase resulted from the purchase by J. A. Fernandez September 24, 1866, from Mr. Celeste Cantrelle of lot No. One (Phillipe Toca, N.P.) Though the purchase price is not given it is assumed that it was approximately $3,500-$4,000. On February 27, 1873, Fernandez sold the lot to Mrs. Carmen Ribas, wife of Auguste Lesseps for $4,000.00 (Gustave Le Gardeur, N.P.).

Additional evidence supporting the belief that the present Beauregard House is, with the exception of its exterior mouldings and interior trim (neither wing now stands), the original of 1833 may be summarized as follows:

1. The advanced age of Widow Cantrelle
   (When the widow purchased the property in 1856 she was 63 years old. Her age, though not necessarily so, would seem to have been a deterrent to the likelihood that she would have torn down an existing dwelling that was apparently in good repair, to build a new house.

2. Church Record - "Souvenir Program St. Maurice Church Fair St. Maurice Ave., 8 Chartres St. New Orleans held at Friscaville Park Street, Bernard Parish April 27-28-29, 1912";
(In a rather detailed history of the early and subsequent land ownership of the Parish, the author, quite possibly a priest, states: "Next came the Etienne Villavaso property. The succeeding properties were those which became the homes of Rene Beauregard, son of General G. T. Beauregard, after having been in possession of Madam Baron; then Martin Villavaso who had married Miss Cantrelle."

Note: Here is a significant statement to the effect that the house Rene Beauregard purchased was the one that had been in the possession of Madam Baron.

3. Contemporary description of the house (1860). -

Alexander Walker's Jackson and New Orleans quoted in Zacharia James S. New Orleans Guide... The News Co. 1891 pp 301-302:

"Let us survey these famous scenes of Jackson's. Time has spared many memorials of the great achievements which we relate. The scene of these events has experienced slighter changes in the last forty years than the arena of any similar occurrences in this land of change and progress. As if to rebuke the deficiencies of our historical records, nature has preserved (1860) in almost their original state the physical characteristics of the scenery associated with the most glorious victory of American arms ... Here he will command a splendid view of the whole scene of the campaign. He will perceive the embankment, somewhat worn by time and the elements, behind which Jackson's men stationed themselves. He can trace it clearly and distinctly from the river to the swamp, the ground near the river having been more exposed to the action of the plow and the tramp of men and cattle. The river having caved some hundred or two feet, the line of the levee has been slightly changed, and the road has worn away the mound and the vestiges of the redoubt on the extreme right. There is a handsome villa, quite ancient, too, in aspect, standing near the road in the centre of the lines and about a hundred yards from the ditch. This, however, has been built since the war." (Underscoring by the writer).

Note: The "handsome villa" here located and described by the able historian Walker would definitely appear to be the Rene Beauregard House. Notice that in 1860 it is described as "quite ancient too in aspect". Such a description would not be applicable to a newly constructed house.

The notice previously referred to (the time of the sale of the house by Widow Cantrelle) makes no mention of a newly constructed house. Had such been the case it is natural to assume that the notice would have used it as one of the attractive selling points.

Though more definite evidence might well be desired to prove conclusively that the present Rene Beauregard House is the one erected in 1833 by Alexander Baron for Widow Guillaume Malus, the weight of evidence would indicate that it is.

Such a conclusion would divorce the possibility that either James Gallier, Sr. or Gallier, Jr. was the architect though possibly the latter may have been employed in a renovation of the house by Widow Cantrelle or in the construction of the west wing with general renovation by Jose Antonio Fernandez y Lineros. The latter possibility would seem the more likely to require Gallier's architectural service and certainly the more than tripled assessment rolls by 1873 point to this period as the one during which the most marked additions and alterations were made. Then too these improvements would appear to be more in keeping with the ambitions of a Spanish nobleman than of an elderly widow. If Gallier, Jr. were so employed it would place the improvements between 1866-1868 for in the latter year he died. (He died at his house 278 Royal Street, May 16, 1868 at 7:30 aged 41. (New Orleans Times May 17, 1868). The association of the Gallier name with the house may, however, rest solely upon the fact that Gallier, Jr. married the granddaughter of the Widow Cantrelle. Since his wife's parents, Martin and Josephine Villavaso, lived next door to the Widow, he was quite likely a frequent guest in both houses.

The Ante Bellum Years
Innovation and Change

During the period of ownership of the Widow Baron the Beauregard House witnessed a number of significant changes in the life of the Parish. An event of signal economic importance to the community was the construction of the Mexican Gulf Railroad. By May 1840 the railroad was in operation from the depot at Good Children Street to Versailles. An announcement of its schedule appeared in The Courier May 1, 1840:

"Mexican Gulf Rail Way Company
Summer Arrangement
Commencing on Sunday the 3rd instant, the locomotive will run during the summer months every day, from the depot in Good Children Street to Versailles or further, as the road may progress, at the following hours:

The route that the railroad followed is shown on "Plan of a Tract of Land Situated in the Parish St. Bernard left bank of the Mississippi River about 4 miles below the City Dec. 7, 1867," signed W. H. Bell. [Book 9 Folio 23, Notarial Archives, N. O.]. The plan shows the Mexican Gulf Rail Road right-of-way through the battleground area and the northern limits of the Beauregard property. Later this railroad was extended to Proctorville.

Passenger traffic on the railroad must have noticeably increased as the result of the purchase, February 19, 1855, of the Pierre Bachelot property for $5,000 by the State of Louisiana for the purpose of memorializing the battlefield of New Orleans. [Guyol, Theodore, Notary Jan.-March 1855, Acts No. 31, Folio No. 102]. Interest in the area increased as plans progressed for the erection of a suitable monument. A contract for the monument was awarded June 28, 1855 by the Jackson Monument Association to Newton Richards and John Stroud & Company at a specified cost of $57,000. [Guyol, Theodore, Notary April-June 1855, Acts No. 32, Folio 417. Note: For monument specifications see appendix. The monument, however, was not completed until December 1908. Authorization for its completion was made by Act of Congress March 4, 1907 with an appropriation of $25,000. It was erected under supervision of army engineers. (See letter of Karl L. Trever, National Archives, to Russell A. Gibbs, February 6, 1951.)] Appendix p. 56657.

Many of the visitors who came to the battlefield paused to admire the "handsome villa" with its stately lawn, its beautiful flower garden and its well cultivated fields. No visit to the battlefield, however, was complete without a stop at the Delaronde plantation, with its beautiful grove of live oaks. Occupied by the British and used as a hospital following the heavy battle casualties of January 8, 1815 this famous sugar plantation, the pride of the Parish, was placed on the auction block the year Baron purchased lot No. 2 of the St. Amand tract.

The Louisiana Courier of March 7, 1832 carried this notice of sale:

"Court of Probates
Parish of St. Bernard
Estate of Marie Elizabeth Eulalie Guerbois, widow of Pierre Denis de la Ronde

In compliance with a judgment of the court of probates in and for the Parish of St. Bernard, made date of the sixteenth of the present month of February, the following property will be exposed to public sale, to wit:--

1. A Sugar Plantation

Situated in the Parish of St. Bernard, at about six miles below the city of New Orleans, and on the side of the river, bounded above by lands of Antoine Bienvenu, Senior, and below by lands of Pierre Lacoste, and measuring 12 arpents front to the river by a depth according to the title. The said plantation opens of (?) about seven degrees, and at a depth of about forty arpents in the lower limit of nine arpents or thereabouts on a line running eastward — thence on a line running north 17 deg. 30 min. east. On the premises are to be found two canals emptying into Bayou Lanrier (?) which leads to Bayou Mazan and communicates with Lake Borgne.

The said plantation is one of the most valuable in Louisiana, both as respects its proximinty to New Orleans, as by the extent of arable lands and the improvements thereon. A quantity of sugar cane sufficient to produce a large crop will be planted on the same before the sale.

The edifices standing on the premises consist of a two story brick house, divided into sixteen rooms - a brick sugar house, containing a very complete Steam Engine imported from England, one Mill, living house, &c forty negro cabins, and all other out buildings required for an extensive establishment.

The said plantation will be sold together with all the implements of husbandry attached to the same.

2. One hundred and nine slaves, to wit:

Forty six men, thirty eight women, and fifteen children. Among whom are tradesmen, such as carpenters, coopers (?), sugar makers, &c. and cooks, mashers &c. and other choice slaves.

3. The horses, cattle and other animals, whatever on said plantation.

4. The Household Furniture. A valuable parcel of silver plate, and various other moveable effects.

5. - - 6. - 7. - 8

... it will be sold by the Judge of the Parish of St. Bernard, on the above described sugar estate, ... on Tuesday the 20th day of March next, at the hour of 11 o'clock, a. m. ...

The above mentioned property shall be sold agreeably to the inventories taken of the same, certified copies of which shall be deposited till the day of sale at the office of Charles Derbigny, Counsellor at Law, Royal Street, No. 128, for the information of the public.

(signed) C. Fagot, Judge
Parish of St. Bernard, Feb. 16, 1832, Feb. 2...
Further information regarding the auction appeared in the Courier of May 24:

"Sale of
De La Ronde's Plantation to be named Versailles
Hewlett & Raspiller, and Domingon
Auctioneers
Will sell at auction, at the new Exchange, on Saturday, 26th instant at noon.

A Portion of the Lands of said plantation, situated 6 miles below town, and so advantageously known, as regards its situation and the elevation of the ground unparalleled even at a great distance of the neighborhood of New Orleans.

A plan of the property will be exhibited at the Exchange several days previous to the day of sale, and the amateurs of agreeable locations for country seats are requested to visit the spot, where all information they may require will be given.

The division of the property is made in lots of about one arpent front by six in depth, more or less, according to their situation. A part are fronting the river, and will be sold with the privilege of the extensive batture. The heights of this land is such that little or no levee is required. The other lots, one of which is 3 acres by about 6 in depth with the extensive mansion outbuildings and garden of the plantation, front De La Ronde and Lake Borgne's avenues, each 50 feet wide each 80 feet between them reserved in the centre of the plantation for the canal of Versailles, intended to communication from the river to the beautiful Bayou Bienvenu, which empties itself into Lake Borgne. By referring to the maps of the vicinity of New Orleans it is evident that this spot is one among the very few that admits of the practicability of execution of this so much wished for an necessary improvement, there being but a small portion of cypress swamps on the line of the canal which meets the bayou of about 100 acres from the river and being there 18 to 20 feet deep and so wide that by right, it might be called a river rather than a bayou.

In the arrangement of the plan the proprietor has reserved for the common use, draining ditches and roads on the limits of Messrs. Bienvenu and Lacoste's plantations and secured to the purchasers the practicability of rendering their lots, convenient, agreeable and useful. It is not unnecessary to remark that persons wishing to secure country seats by locating on this spot of ground, will not have the inconvenience of the sun in coming to town in the morning and returning in the evening.

The sale is made at 1, 2, 3 and 4 years credit from the 20 March ultimo, payable in notes satisfactorily endorsed domiciliated in town, and bearing mortgage.

The deeds of sale will be passed before L. T. Caire, Not. Pub., at the expense of the purchasers who will be put in possession at the expense of the proprietor. May 14."

Mr. Pierre Forrestier, attorney for the ten Delaronde heirs sold the estate April 4, 1832 to Daniel Warburg who later offered it for sale in subdivision lots. The Delaronde heirs were:

1° Dame Elizabeth Eulalie De Laronde
   Spouse of Gabriel Villere dwelling in St. Bernard Parish ...

2° Dame Heloise De Laronde spouse of Mr. Mannsel White, dwelling in this city...

3° Mr. Mannsel White acting in the name and as tutor of Mistress Eliza White his minor daughter representing her mother the late dame Celeste Elizabeth DeLaronde...

4° Dame Josephine Pepite De Laronde spouse of Mr. Thomas Searl Cunningham dwelling in Plaquemines parish ...

WAR COMES AGAIN TO THE PARISH
WAR COMES AGAIN TO THE PARISH

During the period of ownership of the Beauregard House by the Widow Michele Bernard Cantrelle, War came again to the Parish. Since 1699 when the British had been forced back at English Turn by Bienville, the Parish had played a significant part in the strategic defenses of New Orleans. (French Historical Collections of Louisiana Vol. 1 pp 119-122).

This time it was not the cannon of the British fleet nor her stout-hearted, red-coated soldiers that threatened the capture of the city, but rather a salty veteran of a Yankee navy, supported by the blue columns of Maj. Gen. Benjamin F. Butler. For years New Orleans had been one of the main outlets for the vast trade of the Western Country. It was natural then with the outbreak of the Civil War, that Federal strategy should be directed to the control of the Mississippi River and the capture of this great Confederate port.

In anticipation of such an attack Gen. Mansfield Lovell since the fall of 1861 had been lively engaged in strengthening the defences of the area. The general plan adopted was to have two lines of works - an interior line passing through the forts and earthworks to defend the various water approaches, and an interior line embracing New Orleans and Algiers which was designed to repel any attack by land.

Many of these defenses had been begun before Gen. Lovell's arrival under the direction of Major M. L. Smith who described the condition of the outer line of defense as follows:

"The defenses consisted of Fort Pike and Macomb, guarding the approaches to New Orleans by way of Lake Pontcharain; of Battery Bienvenue and Tower Dupre, guarding the streams leading from Lake Borgne to the mainland between the city; of a field work at Proctorville, prepared for six guns, but not armed, guarding the approach to the city by way of the river from the Gulf; of Fort Livingston, guarding the approach by way of Barataria Bay; of Forts Berwick and Chine on Berwick Bay, guarding the approach by the Opelousas Railroad, and a little work called Fort Guion, on La Fouché, was nearly completed and ready for guns:

(War of the Rebellion Records of the Union and Confederate Armies Series I, Vol. VI p. 582)

"The inner line of defense, of which the Chalmette area was an integral part, had by July 1861 reached the stage of preparation described by Maj. Gen. Smith:

..."It consisted of a continuous line across the Gentilly Ridge, prepared for artillery and infantry (this work was, I think, finished but no guns mounted); of a continuous line at Chalmette, stretching from the swamp to the Mississippi, also intended for artillery and infantry about half completed...; of a continuous line on the right bank of the river known as the McGehee line, also stretching from the river to the swamp, and prepared for artillery and infantry (not more than one-sixth of the line was finished...); of a line above the city known as the Barataria line, on the right bank of the river, also stretching from the river to the swamp (not more than a sixth of the line was completed...); of a continuous line of works about a mile and a half above Carrollton, on the right bank of the river, then known as the Victor line, intended to mount fourteen guns between the bank and the swamp (this work was about half done...); of a two-gun battery, guarding the Carrollton Railroad from Lake Pontchartrain, together with supporting infantry works (I do not think this work was then commenced); of a battery and a short infantry line, guarding the shell road and canal leading from Lake Pontchartrain to the city (no work has been done on this line); of a battery and infantry line guarding the road Bayou St. John from Lake Pontchartrain to the city (the contractor had just commenced upon this...); of a battery and supporting infantry work, guarding the Pontchartrain Railroad, leading into the city (I do not think this work had been commenced)."

Ibid p. 582. Note: See: Abbott op.cit 'Map No. 5 Approaches to New Orleans' Part III p IX.

The total length of the intrenchments on this interior line was more than 8 miles. In all it mounted more than 60 guns, of various calibres, and was surrounded by wide, deep ditches (Ibid p. 560) Where the line crossed the river just below the Beauregard House in vicinity of the National Cemetery, it was intended to have a battery of twelve 32 pounders and ten 42 pounders." It was felt the battery would be of sufficient strength to repel any small number of ships that might succeed in passing the forts below. Later it was decided to transfer the 42 pounders to the steamers Carondelet and Bienville for service on Lake Pontchartrain in connection with Forts Pike and Macomb. (Ibid p. 512)

The strength of the land defenses around the city was so great that Gen. Lovell felt confident of repelling, even with the troops at his disposal, any attack that might be made by land. (Ibid p. 561). In April Major M. L. Smith was promoted to Brigadier-General and assigned the command of the interior line. Ten 32 pounders, smooth bore, and two 8-inch columbiads, only recently manufactured in New Orleans, were mounted on this line in batteries on the left and right banks of the river - half on either side (Ibid p. 563).

It was during July of 1861 that Major Smith and Brig. Gen. Hebert began the construction of a raft which was completed and swung into position about the middle of September, stretching from Fort Jackson to Saint Philip. Major General Lovell described the obstruction which he greatly strengthened as follows:

"It consisted of cypress trees 40 feet long and averaging 4 to 5 feet at the larger end. These were placed longitudinally in the river, about 3 feet apart, so as to leave a water-way. These were held together by (or rather strung upon) 2½-inch chain cables, which were passed through mortices in the underside of the logs and held in place by heavy iron staples. To give it stiffening large timbers, 6x1-inch, were securely pinned down transversely to the underside of the logs. This raft was placed in the river by securing the chains on the left bank to large trees, they were fastened to crabstans and to immense anchors buried in the ground and held by heavy timbers.... The depth of the river being about 130 feet at that point, this required an immense amount of chain which was difficult to procure"... (Ibid p. 564).

The difficulty of anchoring such a heavy raft as this in the Mississippi arose from the fact that the bottom is a shifting sand and that in high water the swiftness of the current moved out the anchors from the bottom. These conditions were heightened by a storm in early March which piled up driftwood to such an extent that the raft broke its moorings. Immediately steps were taken to replace it.
The position of the raft was fixed after a consultation with General Beauregard. A long boom was constructed to stretch diagonally across the river above the forts so as to shed the drift over through the opening. The fate of this raft, however, proved no happier than the other for it was swept away in a storm Friday night, April 11th just two days before the Federal fleet opened fire on the forts below New Orleans. (Ibid p. 513)

On April 13, Federal guns opened fire on Forts Jackson and St. Philip and maintained it at intervals for five days when the mortars of Porter's fleet joined to greatly intensify the attack. "With but a single intermission of a few hours", writes Gen. Lovell, "a bombardment was kept up for seven days and nights which for great rapidity and wonderful accuracy of range has no parallel. More than 25,000 shells were thrown, of which not less than one-third fell within the limits of Fort Jackson..." (Ibid p. 517).

Failing to reduce the forts, Farragut, in one of the most brilliant and dramatic naval operations of the War, ordered his fleet to run the batteries. With the signal of "two ordinary red lights" the fleet had gotten underway about 5 minutes to 2 o'clock a.m. April 24th. The advance was made in two columns past the barrier of chairs, the Cayuga leading the right to engage Fort St. Philip, the Hartford (Farragut's flagship) the left to engage Fort Jackson. Moving up in support of the left column came Porter's mortar fleet which poured a terrific fire of shells into Fort Jackson.

In his semi-official report of the engagement Farragut writes:
..."This affair was what I call one of the little elegancies of the profession; a dash and a victory, but the passing of the Forts Jackson and St. Philip was one of the most awful sights and events I ever saw or expect to experience. The smoke was so dense that it was only now and then you could see anything but the flash of the cannon and the five ships or rafts... At length the five slackened, the smoke cleared off, and we saw to our surprise, that we were above the forts..." (Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies in the War of the Rebellion Series I Vol. 18 p. 154)

Having successfully passed the forts, Farragut dispatched Captain Boggs to the Quarantine Bayou and around to Commander Porter to inform him of the success of the fleet and to demand the surrender of the forts. A dispatch was also sent to General Butler informing him that the way was clear for him to land his forces through the Quarantine Bayou.

Leaving two ships to protect the landing of Butler's troops, Farragut proceeded toward New Orleans. He described the advance:

"Owing to the slowness of some of the vessels, and our want of knowledge of the river, we did not reach the English Turn until about 10:30 a.m. on the 25th, but all the morning I had seen abundant evidence of the panic which had seized the people of New Orleans. Cotton-loaded ships on fire came floating down, and working implements of every kind, such as are used in shipyards; the destruction of property was awful."

"We soon descried the new earthwork forts on the old lines on both shores. We now formed and advanced in the same order, two lines, each taking its respective work. Captain Bailey was still far in advance, not having noticed my signal for close order, which was to enable the slow vessels to come up. They opened on him a galling fire, which caused us to run up to his rescue. This gave them the advantage of a raking fire on us for upward of a mile, with some 20 guns, while we had but two 14 inch guns on our forecastle to reply to them. It was not long, however, before we were enabled to bear away and give the fort a broadside of shells, shrapnel, and grape, the Pensacola at the same time passing up and giving a tremendous broadside of the same kind to the starboard fort, and by the time we could reload, the Brooklyn, Captain Craven, passed handsomely between us and the battery and delivered her broadsides and shut us out. By this time the other vessels had gotten up and ranged in, one after another, delivering their broadsides in spiteful revenge for their ill treatment of the little Cayuga. The forts were silenced and those who could run were running in every direction. We now passed up to the city and anchored immediately in front of it, and I sent Captain Bailey on shore to demand the surrender of it from the authorities..."
The levee of New Orleans was one scene of desolation; ships, steamers, cotton, coal, etc., were all in one common blaze and our ingenuity much taxed to avoid the floating conflagration.

(Ibid pp. 155-159)

Shortly thereafter the city surrendered. On the evening of the 29th Captain Bailey brought word that the forts had surrendered to Commander Porter. After an heroic resistance mutiny had finally forced their surrender. Butler came up the same day.

The gallery of the Beauregard House would have offered an unrivaled vantage point to have viewed these exciting operations but there is no evidence to indicate that the Widow Cantrelle so used it, nor that the house suffered any damage from shell fire. With her one slave, Abd Placide Villera, his wife and three small children, she probably sought shelter on the lower floor. (Assessment Roll for Parish of St. Bernard 1862.)

Years later two warriors of the Lost cause were to find shelter in the house - Major Rene Beauregard and his illustrious father Gen. Pierre Gustave Toutant Beauregard, a native of the Parish who ordered the firing on Fort Sumter - the shot that plunged the country into four desperate years of civil strife.
THE POST WAR YEARS
Shortly after the end of the Civil War, when Louisiana and the Parish were still smarting from the restrictions of Reconstruction, Jose Antonio Fernandez of Lineros, July 5, 1866, purchased lot No. Two with its dwelling and outbuildings from Widow Michele Bernard Centrelle, (L. A. Ducatel, N. P. Acts No. 87 Jan.-July 1866). The appearance of the property at this time is well described in the Auction Sale Notice op.cit. attached to the Act.

Acts of sale before Amédée Ducatel, Notary Public, at the expense of the purchaser together with stamps, etc.

N.B. Sketch of the property can be seen at the Exchange.

The last and the highest bidder, Fernandez acquired the property for $3,000.00. That he had expansive ideas for its development is seen by his purchase September 24, 1866 of Lot No. One which immediately bounded his property on the upper side. By this purchase he added five acres to his holding, which now totalled 20 acres. It was probably shortly after this, as we have seen, that he added the west wing on the house and ordered its general renovation.

Probably one of the reasons prompting the construction of this wing was the desirability of providing more comfortable living quarters for an expanding family. January 29, 1866 had witnessed the birth of a new heir - Fernando Francisco Jose Fernandez. (Baptismal Records St. Louis Cathedral N.O. La. (Letter of Mary D. Impastato to Dr. Raffalovich, dated July 1949)

Shortly after he had comfortably established himself death was to claim his nextdoor neighbor, Martin Villavaso. On March 21, 1868 the property known as the "Battle Ground Saw Mill" was put up for a sheriff's sale (No. 584 of the docket of the Second Judicial Court of said Parish). The property is described in "Note for the inventory of the Succession of the late Marie Josephine Cantrelle, spouse of Michel Martin Villavaso" as follows:

"A plantation situated in St. Bernard Parish at Amand five miles below the city of New Orleans on the left bank of the river, measuring three arpents of front by eighty arpents of depth, bounded on the upper line by the properties of Mr. J. A. Fernandez and that of the Jackson monument and on the lower line by the property of - Fazende, together with all the buildings, dependencies, & improvements, consisting in a large steam saw mill to which is attached a grist and flour mill and a lathe machine, a large______(illegible), a storehouse for corn, a forge, plus a large number of buildings for the employees of the mill, a large Hospital - very large Master house, a large Kitchen, rooms for ironing linen, two pigeon houses with chamber in the bottom, Servants rooms, wash house a coach house, privies etc."

From 1866 to 1873 things apparently went well with the Fernandez family. The house and grounds during this period must have presented a picture quite similar to the typical river plantation described by Castellanos, Henry C., New Orleans as It Was, New Orleans The Graham Co. 1905.
The grounds surrounding the mansion house were always laid out with profuse and magnificent shrubbery. This was the spot which usually betrayed a woman's tender care. A spacious avenue, leading from the residence to the gate facing the public road, was the first feature to attract attention. Lined with stately magnolias, their umbrageous limbs diffused a cool temperature without obstructing the course of any current of air. The walks were hedged with jessamines and little groves of myrtles and cedars, of arbor vitae, and arbor cali, with lines of rose and pomegranate bushes marking off the squares, while now and then a huge stalked banana tree or a bristling cactus or Agave Americana would start up and betray our vicinity to the tropical zone. Towering above all this diversified shrubbery were various wide spreading and well shaped pecan trees, or, perhaps, the jagged, twisted and gnarled limbs of that Spartan of the forest, the live-oak. Completely encircling the whole house, yard and garden was a rich dark hedge of orange trees, which, in the fall of the year, were nearly weighed down with the burden of their abundant fruit.

With the advent of the seventies the fortunes of the Fernandes entered a noticeable decline. On February 27, 1873, Fernandez sold lot No. One to Mrs. Carmen Ribas, wife of Auguste Lesseps for $4,000.00 (Gustave Le Gardeur, N.P.)

On April 24, 1876, Mrs. Carmen Lesseps Fernandez was rendered a judgment in her favor in the suit in the Second Judicial Court in Louisiana entitled Mrs. Carmen Lesseps, Wife of J. A. Fernandez vs. Her husband No. 743.

"It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the Community acquets and Jains now existing between the plaintiff, Mrs. Carmen Lesseps, Wife of J. A. Fernandez and her said husband be and the same is hereby dissolved, and that said plaintiff do have and recover of said dependant her husband, the sum of Nineteen thousand seven hundred and fifty-six dollars and seventy-nine cents. ($19,756.29) with eight per cent interest thereon from Judicial demand, and costs of suit, together with the married Woman's legal Mortgage on the property of her Said husband Which above recited Mortgage was duly recorded in accordance to law in book of Mortgage No. Seven folios 325 and 326."

On May 13, Sheriff Albert Estapinol seized the property and following May 29 advertised it for sale "to take place at the Court House of the Parish of St. Bernard on Saturday the 1st day of July 1876, at 11 o'clock A.M." The advertisements were posted in three public places in the Parish: "One on the door of the Court House of St. Bernard, one on that of Francis Artietas Coffee House and one on the door of the Parish Church". The property was sold as advertised on July 1st and was bid in by A. Saulet Esq. for Mrs. Fernandez for $5,000.00.

Just a few days before the sale, the New Orleans Times, June 28, 1876, carried notice of other changes that were about to take place in the battlefield community.

"Proposals For Buildings.

Louisiana State Agricultural & Mechanical College
New Orleans, June 26, 1876

Sealed proposals will be received up to 12 o'clock M. TUESDAY, July 11, 1876 for the erection of proposed buildings for the Louisiana State Agricultural and Mechanical College at Chalmette, in the parish of St. Bernard, according to drawings and specifications prepared by Mr. T. Whitney Carter, architect and now filed for convenience in the office of the State Superintendent of Education, State House Building," Proposals to be addressed under cover to the President of the Board of Control, Louisiana State Agricultural and Mechanical College, University buildings, Baronne Street, New Orleans, where additional information required may be obtained by personal application to the architect.

By order of the Board of Control.

The College was to be erected next door to the Rene Beauregard property on the "Battle Ground Saw Mill" estate that had formerly been owned by Martin Villavaso. This estate had been purchased by the "Board of Control" over a year previous, March 30, 1875, from Mrs. Mary Atkins for $20,555.00. (A. Hero, Jr., N.P.) The college proved an ill-fated venture, however, and was soon involved in a suit with the Citizens Bank of Louisiana. (No record has been found of this suit). On November 30, 1881, the bank sold the property to Lucurgus Hold Wooton for $10,000.00 (Armand Pitot, Jr., N.P.).

On November 27, 1878 Mrs. J. A. Fernandez paid a tax of $40.00 on her property which was then carried on the "Assessment Rolls at an evaluation of $4,000. It will be noticed that this represents a drop of $5,000.00 in the evaluation that was shown in 1873.

By early spring of 1880 Mrs. Fernandez had decided to sell the property. The Daily Picayune of March 27, 1880 carried notice of the sale:

"Positive Sale of Bueno Retiro, A delightful Suburban Residence, Farm and Orangery, on the city side of the Mississippi River, and less than a mile below the United States Barracks and the terminus of the City Horse Car Railway.

By C. E. Giradey, Auctioneer - Office No. 31 Camp Street - Saturday, April 3, 1880 at 12 o'clock, M; at the St. Charles Auction Exchange, will positively be sold at public auction by consent of parties."
THE CHARMING SUBURBAN RESIDENCE PROPERTY, MODEL FARM AND ORANGE ORCHARD, known as BUENO RETIRO. It is within one mile below the Barracks or the horse car station, measures 208 feet 10 inches front on the public road, with batture rights on the Mississippi River by a depth of 2834 feet on the lower side dividing it from the State Agricultural College, and 2734 feet on the upper side dividing it from the property of A. Lesseps, Esq. The width is irregular, converging to a point.

The property is improved by a substantial two-story Brick Mansion, and other dependencies, such as stabling and poultry houses, laborer's quarters, shaded by a magnificent lawn of magnolia and oak trees. The land is exceedingly rich and productive, and under cultivation for vegetables and flowers.

The Orchard contains a fine assortment of fruit trees, comprising Orange, Mespilus, imported Pears and Pecan Trees, besides a large variety of Figs, Grapes, etc., thrifty and bearing, Within half an hour's drive of the centre of the city, a steady demand and market for all that can be produced, and a house of superior comfort and advantages of scenery renders the property desirable, not only for permanent residence, but as an investment of great prominence and productiveness.

Terms and Conditions - One third or more cash, at purchaser's option, and the balance at one and two years for notes specially secured by mortgage and vendor's lien, bearing all the usual clauses of 8 per cent annum interest, from day of sale until final payment; 5 per cent, attorney's fees in event of suit, policy of insurance transferred, and the purchasers to assume the taxes due and exigible in 1880, over the price of adjudication.
Act of sale before G. LeGardeur, Esq., notary public, at the expense of purchaser."

Thus the character of the property with particular relationship to its grounds is well established.

At the time of the sale Mr. Carmen Lesseps Fernandez was residing in the parish of Plaquemines with her husband. On June 4, 1880 she sold the property "Known as the Buen Retiro Place" to Judge Rene Toutant Beauregard, eldest son. of General Pierre Gustave Toutant Beauregard, distinguished officer of the Confederacy, for the amount of $4,100.00. This figure represents approximately half of the price J. A. Fernandez had paid when he acquired the property in 1866, and only $400.00 more than Alexander Baron had paid for the lot No. Two in 1832. One of the provisions of the sale stipulated that the purchaser would "keep the buildings on said property constantly insured against the loss by fire, to an amount not less than Twenty-seven hundred dollars: and to transfer the policy of Insurance to the said vendor until the full and final payment of said note". (Fahey June 1880 Acts No. 20 June-Dec. 1880. Note: Should further research discover one of these insurance policies valuable information might well be obtained relative to the history of the house).

With this purchase the property enjoyed its longest period of uninterrrupted private ownership. Socially prominent Rene Beauregard and his wife Alice Cenas, gave to the house a grace and charm that made it a popular rendezvous of the most notable families of the day.

Like his illustrious father Rene Beauregard had seen service in the Official Records (Series I) Vol. 32, Part III, p. 690) shows First Lieutenant R. T. Beauregard entered the Confederate service as "First lieutenant" of artillery April 1862 at South Carolina and that he was engaged in the battles of Jackson and Missionary Ridge.

In the spring of 1863 when Pemberton was hard pressed by Grant at Vicksburg, General Beauregard dispatched him reinforcements. With justifiable pride the father wrote:

"Hqrs. Dept. South Caroline, Georgia and Florida,
Charleston, S. C.

May 5, 1863.

Lieut. Gen. J. C. Pemberton, Commanding, Jackson, Miss.

Dear General: In obedience to instructions from the War Department, I have sent you two brigades of my troops (about 5,000 men), having selected the best that could be spared, under two of my ablest generals - S. R. Gist and W. H. T. Walker; also two excellent batteries, in one of which is my son, Lieutenant Rene (R. T. Beauregard) . . .

G. T. Beauregard."

Young Beauregard in the Tennessee Campaign was to win comment and warm praise from his commanding officer in his official report dated January 25, 1865:

"Captain Beauregard, commanding my artillery, showed merit beyond his years, and managed the battalion not only to my satisfaction, but to the good of the service and to his own credit." Tbid., Vol. 45, Part 1, p. 751. Continuation of above report.

In the archives of Louisiana University, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, there is to be found the manuscript of Rene Beauregard entitled "Magnolia, The Story of a Plantation". Some of his letters are to be found at Louisiana State University, Howard-Tilton Library, New Orleans, Louisiana, Confederate Historical Museum, New Orleans and The Cabildo Museum, New Orleans.
The name Beauregard was a distinguished one in the history of France. The first to bear it in Louisiana was Toutant de Beauregard who first visited the colony in the service of Louis XIV. Later he settled there. His grandson, Jacques married Helene Judith Reggio, a descendant of the house of Este. Their son Pierre-Gustave Toutant, who was to bring fresh martial lustre to the name, was born in St. Bernard Parish May 28, 1818. In 1841 he married Laure, daughter of Jules Villere, first Creole Governor of Louisiana, and to this union was born Rene Toutant Beauregard. (Dictionary of American Biography)

At the time of his purchase of "Bueno Retiro", Rene Beauregard was a promising lawyer. Two years after its purchase, in the belief that he might enhance the value of his property and that of his neighbors, he, September 25, 1882, granted a right-of-way across the northern limits of his property to the Mississippi Terre Aux Boeufs and Lake Railway Company. [Parish of St. Bernard, Book of Mortgages, No. 11-B, p. 207]

On September 24, 1888 the property was again expanded to include lot No. One which was purchased by Mrs. Alice Cenas Beauregard from Octava Toca for $3,000.00 (E. A. Peyrous, N.P.). It was this year that her husband was elected Judge [The PIERRE G. T. BEAUREGARD AND FAMILY PAPERS, L.S.U.]

It was probably shortly after this that the east wing was added to the house. Unlike the west wing it was entirely out of harmony with the lines of the house.

It was shortly after this that the expansion of heavy industries began to effect noticeable changes in the life of the community. On February 8, 1890 "The St. Bernard Voice" carried notice of the auction sale of Roy's Brick Yard one of the old established industries of the community that had flourished as a contemporary of the "Battle Ground Saw Mill". The brick yard, which was located about six blocks below the Rampart and Dauphine Car Terminus, had a capacity of two and a half million bricks. (Apparently the sale was not effected until 1903.)
The December 3, 1892 issue of The St. Bernard Voice carried disturbing news to all river plantation owners of the Parish:

"To Begin Work Monday
Fences Must Be Moved Back and Room
Made for the New Road

The latest news are to the effect that the National shellroad will be plowed up Monday next as work on the new levee will be then begun. The property holders are removing back their fences and cutting down their trees, and whether they will be finished with the work in time for the levee building cannot yet be ascertained. If a property-holder wants his large trees, to make wood with, he must not simply cut them down, but must go to the expense of uprooting them . . .

The Engineers are going to blow up the large trees which will be left for them to cut down with dynamite, but some people are going to protest against it on the grounds that it is dangerous. Undoubtedly this work resulted in the removal of a number of stately trees from the Beauregard House lawn.

On February 21, 1896 fire destroyed one of the most historic landmarks of the Parish - the McGarty House that had served as Jackson's headquarters. (See Part III, p.XXXII, for photograph of house). The building at this time was owned by Henri Beauregard, brother of Rene. The St. Bernard Voice of February 29th carried an interesting history of the house:

"The dwellings history dates back to the beginning of the century it was the headquarters of 'Old Hickory' during the war of 1812, and it is just above the Rodriguez residence, which for a long time had been General Jackson's headquarters (sic). General John L. Lewis is the authority for the establishment of the true facts in the case. The building was erected just before the war of 1812 by William M. Montgomery, a wealthy merchant and planter. It was then considered one of the finest residences in the south, and as built then has stood the winters of nearly a century without any material alteration since the day it was built. Before the time when the war broke out there were many stories told of the great house, because of the jealous husband, who guarded his lovely wife in the strictest manner possible. When Jackson came to New Orleans with his regiments of Tennesseans and Kentuckians Mr. Montgomery invited him to make his home his headquarters and he accepted the invitation. It was in one of the upper rooms that he drew his lines for the defense of the city, and here he made all the preliminaries for the great battle of January 8....

"In 1825, when the Marquis de Lafayette visited Louisiana, it was in this house that he stopped and was given his first welcome to Louisiana.... An Aunt of Mr. Beauregard who is now 90 years old, witnessed the reception, and says that the vessel bearing General Lafayette stopped just in front of the mansion and then the distinguished French patriot disembarked and was rowed in a small boat to a wharf, and was then escorted by Mr. Ducros to the interior of the house where he was greeted by Governor Henry Johnson. (St. Bernard Voice was a weekly newspaper.)

The pace of industrial expansion was greatly stepped up in 1903-1904. The June 20th issue of the St. Bernard Voice in 1903 carried the notice:

"New Orleans & San Francisco Buys More Ground Here.

"Seven First Ward Properties Are sold at a Good Price and the Company is after More Land....

"The properties bought and prices paid were as follows: Roy $10,000, Dupont de Nemours Company $7,650, Fabares & Serignat, $12,500, Cenas, $22,500; Piat, $18,000, Gueringer, $13,000; Beauregard, $18,350.... The site has a river frontage of 2,300 feet by a depth of 80 arpents.

"The places sold are among the oldest in the parish, the Roy place having been occupied continuously for 67 years by the family, while the Fabres and Serignat and Cenas places constituted the old Peyroux property. The Henry Beauregard plantation was the headquarters of General Andrew Jackson...."

The nature of this expansion was such as to threaten the very existence of the Chalmette Park as is seen by an article that appeared in the St. Bernard Voice December 3, 1903:

"The Chalmette Monument May Be Removed by Frisco

"And the Property Acquired by the Railroad Company to Form Part of its Site for Terminals.

"Options have been obtained on nearly all of the properties between Chalmette Monument and the Chalmette National Cemetery, and the Frisco Railroad will become the owner of the land, will complete the site for its terminals within a few days.

"While there is no official statement to that effect, the report that the Frisco will or already has applied for permission from the government to build wharves in front of the national cemetery and the Chalmette Monument property, which was recently transferred to the care of the national government, is generally credited and those in position to know say most positively that no difficulty will be experienced in that direction.... It is also given out that the Frisco Railroad will endeavor to prevail upon the government to remove the Chalmette Monument at a point near the beautiful and ancient oaks at Port Chalmette, which are silent witnesses to the determined contest between the Americans and British on Jan. 8, 1915"

The St. Bernard Voice, November 14, 1903, carried notice of the sale of the McMillian property and the impending sale of the Rene Beauregard property:

"The McMillian Property

Sold to Frisco for $27,500

Other Land Deals About to be Closed the Cloverlands Dairy Farm and the Two Beauregard Properties Being among them....

The McMillian property was owned by the Louisiana Agricultural College many years ago, and was occupied for a long period by the Villamaso family. Then it passed into the hands of the Wootens, Rhodes and McMillans."

Approximately a year later, Rene Beauregard, November 28, 1904, sold his property to the New Orleans Terminal Company for $18,000.00. It is interesting to note that the act of sale (Generes Dufour N.P. Conveyance Book No. 20 fo 451) describes the property as:

"A certain tract of land situated in the Parish of St. Bernard, in the State of Louisiana, on the left bank of the Mississippi River about one mile below the City of New Orleans known as the "Buen Retiro Place"....

Thus "Bueno Retiro", a name applied to the place by Jose Antonio Fernandez y Lineros, continued in legal use beyond the 24 years of ownership by Rene Beauregard. However in later years the house was to be known by the name of its last private owner.

On the same date of the sale of their house Mrs. Alice Cenas Beauregard sold lot No. One to the New Orleans Terminal Company for $9,500.00 (H. Generes Dufour, N.P. C.O. B. 20 fo 452). Thus the total sale price of the combined Rene Beauregard estate amounted to $27,500. - a price that far exceeded any other the property had brought.

In the years that followed the house was for awhile occupied by tenant caretakers, then in World War I it was used to quarter American troops preparing to embark for European battlefields. For the last 36 years of its empty deserted existence, it has stood like a lonely sentinel, a poignant landmark of a fabulous plantation era that is no more. It is a house that has known gracious living, borne itself proudly, and, but for recent vandalism, worn its age well. Its acquisition by the National Park Service, March 14, 1949, (Watts K. Leverich, N.P. C.O.B. 52 fo. 459) has rescued it from certain oblivion. The decision to restore it for use as an administration-museum building of the park should ensure its perpetuity.
ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTIONS

THE RENE BEAUBEGARD HOUSE
The files of the Historic American Building Survey in the Library of Congress describe the Beauregard House as follows:

"The walls of the house and the columns are brick plastered and painted, the columns being white and the main body of the house a sort of apricot color with green blinds and white trim. The roof of the house which extends out over the colonnade is quite unique, being a hipped red purple slate roof with a very graceful low triple pitch. There are two dormers front and rear and one at each end, placed rather high in the roof. The detail is poor throughout the house.

"Perhaps the most interesting detail of construction is the chimney. There are in reality two chimneys which by means of an arch in the attic are joined together and come out of the roof just below the ridge as one.

"The house represents a rather late development of the Louisiana plantation type. There is a colonnade of eight columns across both front and back of the house, the main body of which is only one room deep. The plan is extremely simple, there being four rooms to each floor with a stair hall at the southeast end. The rooms at the northwest end are in a small wing which was added at a later date than the original building, and which has recently (1935) collapsed. There is also a wing at the southeast end, apparently of the period of about 1890 and of a very bad design, distracting considerably from the appearance of the house which is otherwise good.

Clarence John Laughlin in Ghosts Along the Mississippi (1948 Plate 55, The Enshadowed Pillars (No. 7) describes the house:
Within the area of the Battlefield of New Orleans, there still stands the crumbling mass of the Rene Beauregard House once known as Buene Retiro, or Sweet Seclusion . . . . The house then had an approach of more than two hundred yards, hedged with Bengal roses to either side, and the surrounding grounds landscaped.

"Architecturally the house forms another important step in the evolution of Louisiana architecture from the original Colonial style. The great cement-covered brick columns which supplanted the original squattish brick columns below and wooden colonettes above, and then appeared in a single colonnade, are here presented at the next stage of development - a second identical colonnade was created at the rear of the house. The floor plan is that of the second stage, however; three rooms wide, and one deep, with a hall absent. All the rooms, front and rear, open onto galleries. In the attic the beams are all pegged; and by means of some excellent brick masonry, the flues all merge into huge chimneys. The staircase was inside and at the southend of the house. Later, there were two wings - only one of which still stood at the time of the opposite picture - and this one was definitely added at a date later than the other . . .

"The coloring of Rene Beauregard was excellent - a deep orange for the walls; a soft deep blue for the shutters, beams, and ceiling; the slates (later) browns and purples; earthy reds for the bricks of the verandah; grayish white for the columns and trim . . . .

"And so, in the long sad light of sunset, we gaze at the tall and stately pillars of Sweet Seclusion - pillars on which the leaves of pecan and oak print designs more ancient still than the house itself, designs that evoke the loneliness and dismay of years beyond recall."
J. Frazer Smith in his book White Pillars (1941) writes:

"The color scheme employed at Rene Beauregard could hardly have been more alluring. The stucco of all the walls is a weathered deep orange, while the blinds, gallery beams, and ceilings are the same Madonna blue as at Three Oaks nearby. The slates on the roof range from dark motley buffs to browns and purples; the paving on the ground floor is earthen reds and browns. The columns, entablature, and trim are, of course, all white. The whole exterior has mellowed quietly with age."

Note: Smith describes the blue of the Three Oaks blinds: "The blinds and ceiling beam work of the galleries are in the most luminous blue I have ever seen which must have originally been like the Madonna blue of Old Mexico."

Scott, W. S. in Old Plantation Houses in Louisiana makes this comment on the Rene Beauregard House:

"It is smaller and less pretentious but more idigenous in type. It is altogether more charming in color and proportions than Three Oaks."

The most accurate and detailed description of the house is that given by Mr. Samuel Wilson one of the foremost authorities on the historical architecture of Louisiana. The following description is from a letter by Mr. Wilson to the writer dated January 2, 1952:
The so-called Rene Beauregard House is unique in many respects architecturally. Its plan form derives from the very earliest houses built by the French in Louisiana, its general exterior character is that of a plantation house of the 1830's, but its architectural detail, both interior and exterior, is that of a house of the 1850's.

It is a small, two-story brick structure having but three rooms on each floor with a small stair hall at the east end. The largest room, about 18' by 22', occupies the west end of the building with two smaller rooms, each about 18' by 11', between it and the stair hall. The block of the house is thus a thin rectangle, only one room deep, set facing the south and the river. Porticos composed of eight rather closely spaced plastered brick columns, flank the house on the north and south sides and support galleries at the second floor level. The galleries are of wood, framed between the brick walls and the brick columns, and between the columns is a railing of cross stick balusters. Access to all the rooms is from the galleries, the rear or north gallery being also accessible from the stair hall. The rooms are also connected by interior doorways, the result being a very open plan ideally suited to the climate and the informal French way of living, which sacrificed some privacy for the greater comfort afforded by cross ventilation, and the greater use of space unwasted in connecting corridors. As Benjamin Latrobe remarked, in his Impressions Respecting New Orleans, 'We derive from the English the habit of desiring that every one of our rooms should be separately accessible, & we consider rooms that are thoroughfares as useless. The French and Continental Europeans generally live, I believe, as much to their own satisfaction in their houses as we do in ours, and employ the room they have to more advantage because they do not require so much space for passages. The comfort is a matter of habit.' (p106).

A simple, well proportioned wood cornice is carried across the tops of the columns and around the house, supporting a rather low-pitched, hipped roof. The roof is framed with large wooden trusses spanning between and supported by the front and rear columns. The rafters are then framed on purlins which run between the trusses, an extra rafter section being provided around the lower part of the roof to raise the level of the sheathing to the cornice height and thus give to the roof a pleasing concave surface. The roofing material is slate of a rich purple color, probably of Welch origin, the hips and ridge being covered with square cut, butt ended, vitrified tiles. There are six wood dormers, two on each of the long sides and one at each end of the roof, and a single squarish brick chimney rises from the center slightly in front of the ridge. Actually the house has two chimneys, one on each of the brick cross-walls, but in the attic these are brought together by means of a great brick arch spanning across the center room. This chimney contains flues for the six fireplaces of the house. The attic is unfinished, with all the roof framing and chimney construction exposed. It is well lighted however by the dormer windows and easily accessible by the stairway which continues up from the second floor. Because of the way the roof is framed up from the columns rather than from the front and rear walls, the house has a much larger appearance than would otherwise be the case. This is a characteristic of many Louisiana houses.

The brick walls are all plastered inside and out, the exterior walls being scored to simulate stone courses and painted a warm orange-yellow. The columns and all exterior woodwork except the shutters are white, the shutters being a dark green. The openings in the first story are all casement doors glazed in rather small lights above with a panel below. There are heavy batten blinds panelled on the inside. The second floor openings however are large double hung windows extending to the floor and having louver shutters. The principal entrance appears to have been into the center room down stairs from the river side. This door is emphasized by a simple wooden pediment. The mouldings of all the trim, interior and exterior is of a heavy late Greek revival character. Unless some evidence could be found to show that these details were the result of some later and most thorough renovation, they would definitely date the house from the 1850s period, for mounding and details of this character cannot be found in Louisiana at an earlier date.

"The first floor, raised only a foot or so above the grade was of wood construction and had completely rotted out some years ago. The mantles in each room were also of wood of a rather crude and heavy design, further evidence of the late date of the house.

"At the west end of the house there formerly stood a small, flat roofed, two story addition containing a single room on each floor. Behind this to the north, the gallery was extended to contain a small nicely detailed wooden stairway. This wing, quite similar in character to the main house was apparently added soon after its acquisition in 1866 by Jose Antonio Fernandez Y Lineros identified as the Marquis de Trava, and generally credited with having built the house in 1840, (an obvious error). The enclosure of the upper north gallery in glazed casements and wood panels was probably also done at the time of the erection of the west wing. The walls of this wing were of brick, plastered, scored and painted like the rest of the house. They were however only eight inches in thickness and not bonded into the older brickwork, probably one of the causes of their ultimate collapse.

"At some still later date a second wing was added to the east end, a wing entirely of frame construction and of such an inharmonious and late Victorian character as to suggest an 1890 date. This was during the period (1880-1904) of ownership by Judge Rene Beauregard, whose name has always since been attached to the house. Both wings have entirely disappeared in recent years."
THE LEGAL CHAIN OF OWNERSHIP AND PROPERTY DESCRIPTION
Let No. Two on which the Beauregard House was built was purchased by Alexander Baron April 10, 1832 at public auction for $3,700. [Carlile Pelleck W. P.] The property is legally described as:

"A certain lot of ground, part of the plantation of Hilaire and Louis St. Amand, free men of color, in St. Bernard Parish "situated approximately five miles below the city on the left bank of the Mississippi River and designated by the number Two on a plan which the vendors had made by Allen [Allen] d'Hemecourt under date of March 5, 1832". Dimensions and limits: "Two hundred four feet six inches front on the River on the line marked AB on the said plan, and extending in depth between two straight lines meeting at D. Two thousand seven hundred forty eight feet [2,748 ft.] nine inches /9 in./ on the line of the upper boundary, and two thousand eight hundred thirty four feet [2,834 ft.] six inches /6 in./ on the lower boundary line; said lot being bounded on the upper side by lot designated on the plan by number One and on the lower side by lot number Three, both lots running the full length of number Two and adjoining it on either side. See attached sketch by Télédame]. Included in this sale is that portion of the batters facing the said lot of ground and any accumulation thereon which may occur subsequently in any manner whatsoever."

Acquisition: "The land sold belongs to the vendors through purchase from Pierre Denis Delaronde April 28, 1817. [Michel de Armas N.P.] Thus lot No. Two formed a part of the plantation purchased by the St. Amands from Delaronde. At a cost of $55,000.00 Delaronde had acquired the property "at a judicial auction sale made by George W. Morgan Sheriff of the Parish and of the City of New Orleans, on the twentieth of last February, following an order of seizure rendered by the Honorable first district court, in the matter of P. D. Delaronde vs. Widow Chalmette, Pierre, Beloise, Visteire, Eulalie and Zillie, heirs of the late Sieur T. Deline."

"This land belonged to the late Sieur Ignace Deline as follows: the sixteen arpents eleven toises and three feet on the upper side through purchase by act before the undersigned notary June fourteenth one thousand eight hundred thirteen and six arpents on the lower side by means of purchase from Charles Antoine de Regie according to an act of sale before Pierre Fedesclaux, then Notary Public in this city, which act is dated February ninth of the year one thousand eight hundred fifty."

The first plantation of six arpents purchased by Chalmet from Charles Antoine de Regie [Reggie], February 9, 1805, for $12,000.00 had formerly been in the possession of Dame Françoise Delille de Mandeville, widow of Antoine Phillippe Marigny de Mandeville. Reggie had acquired the property from the widow July 13, 1794. [Master Fernandez Rodrigues N.P.]

The St. Amand plantation is described as:

"A certain lot of ground situated approximately one mile and a half from this city and below it, on the left bank of the River, measuring twenty-two arpents eleven teisses and three feet front by a depth measuring as follows: the sixteen arpents eleven teisses three feet on the upper side being of double concession, and the six lower arpents (arpents on the lower side) extending as far as the lake; this land is bounded on the upper side by land belonging to Jean Rodrigues whose land measures one-half arpent front bounded above by a line limitrophe with the plantation formerly belonging to the late Edmond Macarty (which line) extends northward fourteen degrees thirty minutes East, and on the lower side by a canal there situated, which canal extends north twenty-three degrees East, this Canal serving as a boundary between the lands now being sold and that of the Sieur Rodrigues up to the point where the latter piece of land measures two and one-half arpents wide, from which point the line separating the property being sold and that of Sieur Rodrigues runs parallel to the line separating the Rodrigues land from that formerly belonging to the late Edmond Macarty, that is to say in a northerly direction fourteen degrees thirty minutes east; this is more clearly shown on a plan drawn June first of the year one thousand eight hundred thirteen by Barthelemy Lafon, surveyor which plan is annexed to the act of sale passed June fourteenth of the year one thousand eight hundred thirteen before the undersigned notary, by Henry Dangerfield, Anne, Widow Charles M. Thurston, and Alfred and Edmond Thurston to Ignace Delene; the land now being sold is bounded on the lower side by land of Antoine Bienvenu, the line separating the two properties running east in a sixteen degree thirty minutes northerly direction; together with all buildings and improvements thereon (on the land being sold), without limit or reserve, etc."

Chalmes in turn had acquired the major part of this plantation \(\sqrt[6]{16}\) sixteen (16) arpents, eleven (11) teises and three (3) inches front on the River by a depth of a double concession, bounded on the one side by the purchaser and on the other by that of the Sieur Jean Rodrigues according to a plan drawn by Bartholomew Lafon under date of June thirteenth of the year eighteen eight from Henry Daingerfield, Anne Thurston, Widow of Charles M. Thurston, Alfred and Edmond Thurston, for $45,000.00 on June 14, 1813.

Chalmes's combined holdings of 22 arpents, 11 teises and 3 feet represented an investment of $77,000.00.

By these purchases he gained immortality for his name in that 17 months later his plantation was to become the major scene of the battle of New Orleans - a battle that was to bring great renown to American arms but financial ruin to him.

Henry Daingerfield, Alfred Thurston, Edward Thurston and Anne Thurston had acquired the above described property from the United States of America, April 24, 1813, for the amount of $44,000.00. This completed the negotiations for purchase which had been begun earlier, June 1, 1811, by Charles M. Thurston and Henry Daingerfield of the Mississippi Territory. Both men were close friends of David Holmes, first Territorial Governor of Mississippi who prevailed upon them to migrate from Virginia to Mississippi.
Before the negotiations of purchase were finally complete Charles M. Thurston or rather Thurston died March 21, 1812 and was buried on the plantation (supposedly about 2,500 feet southeast of the Chalmette Monument). In a very informative letter to the writer from Mr. Franklin Marion Gentry of Manhasset Woods Road, Manhasset, New York, a direct descendant of Charles Myrn Thurston, it was learned that the name is spelled Thurston, not Thurston. "In fact," states Mr. Gentry, "the motto on the coat-of-arms is 'Thrust On'. This distinguished Virginia clergyman, soldier and patriot was a close friend of George Washington, (one of his daughters married into the Washington family), kinsman of George Wythe (signer of the Declaration of Independence), and kinsman of Robert Carter Nicholas, (Treasurer of the Colony and first Treasurer of the State of Virginia).

In his biographical sketch of Reverend Thurston, Mr. Gentry writes:

"REV. AND COL. CHARLES MYRN THURSTON was born Nov. 6, 1738, in Gloucester Co., Va., the son of Col. John Thurston and his wife Sarah Myne. He married first Mary Buckner and second Ann Alexander, leaving descendants by both wives. He died March 21, 1812, on his plantation at Chalmette, St. Bernard Parish, La. He completed his education at William and Mary College in 1754 and in 1758 served as Lieutenant of Provincials under Gen. Forbes in the French and Indian Wars, taking part in the expedition to capture Fort Duquesne (now Pittsburgh) after General Braddock's defeat. Later he became a Captain of Colonial Militia. He served as Vestryman of Patsworth Parish, Gloucester Co., Va., and after a few years went to England to study for the ministry. After taking Holy Orders in 1765 from the Bishop of London, he returned to Gloucester Co., Va., and became Minister of Patsworth Parish until 1768 when he removed to Frederick Co., Va., where he served as Minister of Frederick Parish until 1777. He was Chairman of Committees of Safety of Frederick Co., Va., in 1774; Representative in the Virginia Conventions in 1775-6; and Member of the Court of Commissioners in 1776. From his pulpit and elsewhere he espoused the cause of American Independence, harangued the youth of the community to join the army, and was active in the procurement of military provisions and supplies. At the start of hostilities, he laid aside his clergyman's robes and at his own expense organized a company of volunteers of which he was elected Captain, thereafter being known as 'The Fighting Parson of the Revolution'. With his company he marched to New Jersey to join the forces of Gen. George Washington. He was promoted to Colonel, Jan. 15, 1777, of one of the additional Continental Regiments under the immediate command of Gen. George Washington. At the Battle of Piscataway, near Amboy, N. J., on March 8, 1777, he led his troops into action against vastly superior numbers and had an arm shattered in the engagement. His son, then only eleven years old, served as his aide. Virginia was unable to recruit sufficient men to complete Thrusten's Regiment, whereupon it was consolidated with Gist's First Continental Regiment and Col. Thrusten resigned Jan. 1, 1779, as a supernumerary. He continued to support the cause of American Freedom and was active in the affairs of Virginia. He was Member of Committee to Outfit Troops in 1781; Member of the House of Delegates, Continental Congress in 1781; Justice of Frederick Co., Va., in 1790; and was successively a founding Trustee of Warm Springs, Va. (now Berkeley Springs, Morgan Co., W. Va.); Beaconsborough, Ky. (although he never went there); and Front Royal, Va. In 1806 he moved south, stopping for about two years in Tennessee and Mississippi, then moving on to New Orleans, La. He lies buried on his plantation at Chalmette, the Battle of New Orleans having been fought over his grave. A short time before the battle his heirs sold the plantation embracing most of the battlefield, to Ignace Delino Chalmette.

Regarding the identity of Henry Dangerfield Mr. Gentry writes:

... "He was called Henry in the will of Col. Thrusten, who was his father-in-law, and elsewhere in several legal papers he is called Henry. However, genealogies refer to him as William. He had a double name apparently and I have seen it stated that he was William Henry Dangerfield. He was from Winchester, Va., and on Aug. 10, 1794, in Frederick Co., Va., married Elizabeth Mynn Thrusten. She was born April 6, 1773, in Frederick Co., Va. Henry Dangerfield went to Mississippi about 1808/9 with Col. Charles M. Thrusten and his brother-in-law, George Flewerdew Morton, who married another of Col. Thrusten's daughters (I am descended from him). . . . I think Dangerfield was in the army for a short period for there is an affidavit concerning him in the Thrusten-Weeks-Conrad papers in the archives of the Univ. of La. at Baton Rouge which mentions a conversation with him at a contentment at Washington, Miss., around 1810/11. He was the first Secretary of the State (or Territory) of Mississippi. His obituary appears in the "Mississippi Republican", Natchez, Miss., issue of Mar. 1, 1815, but I have not looked it up to get the exact date of his death . . . . His widow was living in Natchez, Miss., in 1835, but I do not know when she died. They were survived by one daughter who married Gen. Felix Houston (not Sam) of the Texas Army . . . ."

The legal chain of title to this plantation may be traced further with the credit sale of Philip Grymes, Attorney General of the United States to Thomas H. Williams for the United States of America March 15, 1811 [Michael de Armas N.P,] Consideration ($1,00).

The United States of America acquired the plantation in a suit against William Brown No. 2324, Superior Court For Territory Of Orleans Parish Of Orleans, State of Louisiana (Suit has apparently been lost).

William Brown acquired the plantation March 21, 1808 from Jean Barton Prevost [Pierre Pedeslau, N.P,]

Description: "A plantation situated one mile and a half from this city on the left bank of the River, upon which plantation is a Master house, a sugar mill, a refinery, stone house, nuger (sic) cabins and several other buildings; bounded on the lower side by that of the vendor, together with the front and depth measurements belonging thereto, and such as belonged until this day to the present vendor, without limit or reserve and such as purchased from the late Pierre Marigny by private act(under seizin) recorded February sixteenth, in the office of Narcisse Broutin, in the year 1798."
Description: "Likewise another plantation situated four miles from and below this city and on the same side of the River together with mill and implements, said land comprising three and one half arpents front, by a depth stated in the act of purchase by Mr. Laurent Sigar on December twenty-third, one thousand eight hundred seven before us; which three and a half arpents close at a point measuring one arpent and a half the measurement of the property continuing thus from that point throughout its depth. Acquisition: The vendor acquired the said land by purchase the first (described) from Laurent Sigar by act before us dated June 12, 1805, and the second from Nicholas Roche, also by act before us but dated December twenty-first, one thousand eight hundred five.

Consideration: $50,700.00".

In the attached Certificate 386, issued by the Commissioners of Land Claims for the Eastern District of the Orleans Territory dated New Orleans Jan. 3, 1812, William Brown is shown "entitled to a patent for a tract of land situate in the county of Orleans on the East side of the Mississippi — — bounded above by the lands of J. M. Pintard — — and below by the lands of Chalmet DeLine — — having sixteen arpens eleven teises & three feet in front and forty arpens in depth . . ." The Board's examination revealed that "the front and first depth of forty arpents of this land was actually inhabited and cultivated on the 20th day of December, 1803 and for more than ten consecutive years prior thereto". So much the Board confirmed but rejected the claim to the remaining extension in depth. The old Board was the first appointed by the United States to investigate claims that originated prior to the Louisiana Purchase in 1803. [Land Office Records, Capitol Building, Baton Rouge, La]
In Part III, p. VII are found photostatic copies of the field notes of "Township 13 S., Rang 12 E., District S. E. East of River" surveyed by George Dougherty, 1836. These notes represent surveys of Pierre du Laronde No. 284, Anthony Bienvenue No. 152, L & H. St. Amand No. 170, Claim of William Brown No. 386 and Francis B. Langille No. 185.

In the same section p.XI are found the field notes of the same township surveyed by George H. Grandjean, 1872, covering the claims of William Brown O. B. 386 and Debeuchel Sec. 9 T. 13 R. 12 (no confirmation found).

When on April 10, 1832 the St. Amands offered a portion of their plantation for sale it will be noted, from the auction notice in the Louisiana Courier March 7, 1832, previously quoted, that only 10 arpens were involved. It will further be observed that "of the ten arpens six are situated at the upper limit of the plantation on the side of the city - The two first arpens contiguous to the boundary of Mr. Edward Prevost's property reach only 15 arpens more or less in depth; and the four other arpens 90 to 80 arpens in depth. The 4 arpens at the lower limit are contiguous to the plantation of Antoine Bienvenue. They are entitled to the double concession of 80 arpens . . ."

Thus the St. Amands retained 12 of the 22 arpens of the plantation they acquired from Pierre Denis Delaronde, April 28, 1817. Investigation revealed that the purchaser and price of the first five lots were as follows:

1. Lot No. One was purchased April 10, 1832 by Theophile Wilts for $3,700. [Carlile Pelleck, N.Pa]

   It was subsequently sold:

Note: Following this purchase Lot No. Five became a part of the "Battle Ground Saw Mill" property.

From the foregoing it is apparent that lots Two and Three having a depth of only 15 arpens more or less were the least expensive of the lots, constituting 10 arpents of the St.
Amand plantation, offered for sale April 10, 1832. It is of further interest to note that in a vicinity where land ownership changed so rapidly, the Beauregard House property remained relatively stable.

In Part III there is an interesting photostat copy of a Plan by Alleu d'Hemecourt dated Jan. 24, 1837 showing the partition of a plantation into lots, apparently for sale, within the environs of 5 miles of New Orleans. This would place it within the battlefield area. So far the writer's research has not definitely established its identity -- made especially difficult by an illegible title. An assumption is that it represents a further partitioning of a remaining portion of the St. Amand plantation. It is of particular interest because of the houses and outbuildings shown.

Dear Sir: Your letter of March 27th and questionnaire relative to Rene Beauregard House have been received, and we are giving this matter necessary attention. In due course you will hear from us.

Vice President
Mr. Richard Koch, District Officer

Dear Sir:

In reply to your letter of March 27th, inquiring about Rene Beauregard House:

Except with respect to the date of acquisition by New Orleans Terminal Company of this property, names of its grantors and descriptions in deeds, etc. we are unable to give any definite information. The property, upon which what is known as Rene Beauregard House is located, was conveyed to New Orleans Terminal Company in 1904 in two parcels by grantors of the name of Beauregard (1) by Mrs. Alice Cenas, wife of Rene Toutant Beauregard, November 28, 1904, and (2) by Rene Toutant Beauregard, November 28, 1904. In latter deed, the property is mentioned as "Buen Retiro Place." Deed from Mrs. Alice Cenas Beauregard recites derivation of title by her from Octave Toca, September 24, 1888, and deed from Rene Toutant Beauregard recites derivation by him from Mr. Carmen Fernandez, June 4, 1889.

We have been told the property "is the old Beauregard House, built by Gallier, Architect, for Marquis de Trava, and was called Buen Retiro; purchased later by Judge Rene Beauregard, son of General G. T. Beauregard." The following is also said to be copied from St. Maurice Church Program, April 1912:

The Plantation patented to William Brown 1812, subsequently subdivided; upper portion came to the Pierre family - Chalmette Monument located thereon. Next tract is the United States Soldier's Cemetery. Next, Etienne Villavaso property. The succeeding properties became the home of Rene Beauregard, son of General G. T. Beauregard, after having been in possession of Madam Baron; then Martin Villavaso, who married Miss Cantrelle. Their daughter Aglais was the wife of Mr. Gallier, who built the French Opera House, Gallier Court, and the old Louisiana National Bank Building on Cannon Street.

We have also heard that the property was owned and occupied by Augustin MacArte, a rich planter, at the time of the three battles of New Orleans, and was used by General Andrew Jackson as headquarters (N. B. the battle of New Orleans was fought in 1815.

The house has not been used by New Orleans Terminal Company since acquisition; except, perhaps, as rented out from time to time to local tenants for dwelling purposes. It was occupied by troops for a while during the World War, and has been vacant since. It is in such condition as to be untenantable.

We would refer you to Louisiana State Historical Society, or the U. S. Daughters 1776-1812. It seems to us that this property has its real historical value by virtue of its history prior to acquisition by the Beauregard family, but the Louisiana State Historical Society probably has due record of it and should be able to be of service to you in forming opinion as to its value and succession. In any event, on account of its distinction in the community, careful investigation into its history at New Orleans would develop more than could be disclosed by title abstracts.

Hoping the above may be of possible assistance in your investigation, we remain

Very truly yours,

Rene Beauregard House

In St. Bernard Parish a mile below the City of New Orleans and adjoining the field of Chalmette where the Battle of New Orleans was fought in 1815, is the Rene Beauregard House. Originally called Bueno Retiro, the house was built in 1840 by James Gallier, Sr., Architect for the Marquis de Trava.

According to J. P. Coleman, writing in the New Orleans States June 1, 1924, the house was subsequently occupied by "Judge Rene Beauregard, eldest son of General P. G. T. Beauregard of the Confederate Army, and J. A. Fernandez, who married the daughter of Alexander Lesseps. Judge Beauregard's brother Henry lived there, having purchased the Bonzano property next door to Bueno Retiro. The Bonzano Mansion disappeared some years ago, when the Southern Railway Company which also owns the Rene Beauregard House, purchased the property, developed the house, and erected in its stead an immense warehouse, which now occupies the site."

The house represents a rather late development of the Louisiana plantation type. There is a colonnade of eight columns across both front and back of the house, the main body of which is only one room deep. The plan is extremely simple, there being four rooms to each floor with a stair hall at the southeast end. The rooms at the northwest end are in a small wing, which was added at a later date than the original building, and which has recently collapsed. There is also a wing at the southeast end, apparently of the period of about 1890 and of a very bad design, detracting considerably from the appearance of the house which is otherwise good.

The walls of the house and the columns are of brick plastered and painted, the columns being white and the main body of the house a sort of apricot color with green blinds and white trim. The roof of the house which extends out over the colonnade is quite unique, being a hipped red-purple slate roof with a very graceful low triple pitch.
There are two dormers front and rear and one at each end, placed rather high in the roof. The detail is poor throughout the house.

Perhaps the most interesting detail of construction is the chimney. There are in reality two chimneys which by means of an arch in the attic are joined together and come out of the roof just below the ridge as one.

In a letter dated April 17, 1934, addressed to the Historic American Building Survey in Louisiana, Mr. J. E. Fitz-wilson of the New Orleans Terminal Company (Southern Railway) says:

"The property, upon which what is known as the Rene Beauregard House is located, was conveyed to New Orleans Terminal Company in 1904 in two parcels by grantors of the name of Beauregard -

(1) Mrs. Alice Cenas, wife of Toutant Beauregard November 28, 1904 and
(2) Rene Toutant Beauregard, November 28, 1904."

In the latter deed the property is mentioned as "Bueno Retiro Place."

Deed from Mrs. Alice Cenas Beauregard recites the derivation of her title by her from Octave Toca, September 24, 1888, and deed from Rene Toutant Beauregard recites derivation by him from Mr. Carmen Fernandez, June 4, 1880.

Mr. Fitzwilson continues: We have been told the property is the old Beauregard House, built by Gallier, Architect, for Marquis de Trava, and was called Bueno Retiro; it was purchased later by Judge Beauregard, son of General G. T. Beauregard.

The following is also said to have been copied from St. Maurice Church Program, April 1912:

The plantation patented to William Brown, 1812 subsequently subdivided; upper portion came to the Piernas Family - Chalmette Monument located thereon. Next tract is the United States Soldiers' Cemetery. Next, Etienne Villavaso property. The succeeding properties became the home of Rene Beauregard, son of General G. T. Beauregard, after having been in possession of Madam Baron; then Martin Villavaso, who married Miss Cantrelle. Their daughter, Aglais, was the wife of Mr. Gallier, who built the French Opera House, Gallier Court, and the Old Louisiana National Bank on Common Street."

It is also said that the property was once owned by Augustin Macarte, a rich planter, at the time of the three battles of New Orleans, and was used by General Andrew Jackson as headquarters. The Battle of New Orleans was fought in 1815.

The house has not been used by the New Orleans Terminal Company since its acquisition; except perhaps as rented out from time to time by local tenants for dwelling purposes. It was occupied by troops for a time during the World War, and has been vacant since. It is at present in such condition as to be untenable.
APPENDIX
Detailed Inspection of the House
On January 15th and 17th the writer, in company with Superintendent Gibbs and Architect Merrill, made careful inspections of the house in order to determine as many structural details as possible and to explore the extent of damage caused by vandals in the past few years.

Generally the building is in far worse state of repair than when the writer last examined it in 1939. Since then, to mention something of the damage, the lower stairs have been partially destroyed and removed; the porch railing broken out, the mantals removed if not destroyed; the partitions on the second floor demolished; one back section of the masonry wall torn out; the plaster knocked-down; the slate roof torn off and the chimney dismantled.

In the destruction of the chimney the vandals removed one of the most interesting architectural features of the house.

The extent of mutilation of this interesting old landmark is graphically portrayed both on the interior and exterior by the recent photographs shown in Part III- Rene Beauregard House, (Photographs and Documents).

The inspection revealed that second hand lumber had been used in its construction. This is definitely noticeable in the attic framing. (See Part III, p. XXXI.) The use of such secondhand materials suggests the possibility that a portion of the materials of an original house on this site was used in the erection of the present structure.
Another interesting feature discovered in the inspections was the location of a former window or door on the west side of the house. When the first of the wings was added, this window or door was bricked up and apparently a door was cut on either side of it. Its position is indicated by the outstretched arms of the figure in the photograph—Part III, p.XXVIII.

Reference should be made to the architectural report of Mr. Merrill on these inspections.

Extracts from the Autobiography of James Gallier Architecture

Vol. 1, New Orleans August 1905, No. 2

Autobiography of James Gallier, Architect 1798-1858.

Editor's Note

The lasting influence of the Senior Gallier upon the architectural development of New Orleans, and the surrounding country, together with the light he throws upon the minutiae of building operations of his day, makes his autobiography one of rare interest to the architect. It was published in Paris in 1864 at his own expense. The volume from which this reprint is taken is from the library of Mr. T. P. Thompson and bears evidence of having been carefully revised by the author.

After Mr. Gallier retired from active practice in New Orleans in 1850, to be succeeded by his son James Gallier, Jr., he devoted his leisure and income to travel, spending considerable time upon the shores of the Mediterranean. His description of architecture studied by him in his travels is of considerable interest, as it is that of a skilled architect. So far as possible the old buildings which have disappeared as well as those still in existence, to which reference is made, will be illustrated, as will also the buildings described in his journeyings.
I was born at the village of Ravendale in the county of Louth, on the 24th of July 1798, in one of the most pleasant valleys on the eastern coast of Ireland . . . .

At the age of about four years I was sent to a small country school, the only one in the neighborhood, which was kept by a poor Englishman called Brett, who with a wife and children occupied a miserable cottage of one apartment, that served for kitchen, for parlor, and all, as well as for the school; the scholars were but few, and we spent the greater part of our time playing all sorts of pranks and games, making little progress in learning but much in the exercises of running, leaping and wrestling, and we thus grew up as active and hardy as mountain goats.

My brother John was my junior by only twenty months; he and I grew up together in the closest intimacy and brotherly affection... My other brothers being several years younger than John and I, we never knew them so intimately as he and I have known each other. After having passed the greater part of six years under Brett, and had learned to read, write and the first rudiments of arithmetic, we were sent to school at Dundalk which was kept by the Rev. Samuel Nielson, an excellent man, and a good teacher... In this way I continued until I had reached my fourteenth year, at which time the amount of my learning was very small; a smattering of English grammar and composition, arithmetic and mensuration. I was then taken finally from school, just at the time when I could have made the most rapid progress in studies of any kind, and bound apprentice to my father, to learn the business of a builder...

Shortly after the expiration of my father's lease, there was no employment to be had at his business anywhere about the country; it was therefore arranged, chiefly at the suggestion of my mother, that I should go to Dublin and study the art of architectural drawing; so with that intent my father accompanied me to the city and got me admitted to the School of Fine Arts, which was at that time kept in Hawken's street. The architectural school was open only on three days of the week, and then for only two hours of each day, so that I had the intermediate time at my disposal, and I obtained employment as a builder at some houses that were being erected by Alderman Thorp in Mountjoy's Square; the wages I there received were very small, and, as my father at that time could afford me but little assistance from home, I had to manage very closely to make ends meet.

Having always shown something of a taste for and a strong inclination towards works of art, I now filled up every spare hour I could get at copying orders of architecture and such other details as I could find at the academy; and, although there was but very little instruction given at the school, I there got the first glimpse of the way in which drawings were made; and, in a few months passed at that establishment, I received the only direct teaching I have ever had.
After having been at Dublin for several months... I returned home.

... In the month of May, 1816, I crossed the channel from Dundalk to Liverpool...

On my arrival I was told that Manchester promised a better prospect for employment, so I without delay set out to walk from Liverpool, and on reaching Manchester I was employed at the building of a cotton mill... My wages were but four shillings per day... I remained in Manchester as long as I could get employment. I then returned to Liverpool, where I obtained work from a relation of mine... I remained with him for several months and then returned home....

In the autumn of 1820, seeing no prospect of business for the winter, I thought the best use I could make of the time was to try and improve my education, which up to that period had been much neglected, so with that intent I passed several months at a school in Dundalk, where I applied myself assiduously to studies such as book-keeping, geometry, French, and English exercises, etc., etc., and made such general use of those months, as to benefit me very materially in after life....

In 1821 and 1822, I obtained some small building contracts about the country, but as they were paltry and unprofitable John and I decided upon going to London and there try our fortunes together at the fountain head....
In a short time after we had become acquainted with the London methods of doing business, we took piece-work from our employers, and being very strong and active were soon able to save some money... In our second year in London we entered into a new arrangement with our employers, by which we agreed to take large quantities of joiners' work at certain fixed prices, and then engaged other men to assist us in its execution; this we continued to do for nearly three years...

Having previously to leaving Ireland become acquainted with an amiable young English girl, Miss Elizabeth Tyley, whose parents resided near Market-Darton, in Shropshire, we maintained a correspondence for some time and now agreed to marry; so with that intent I made a journey from London into Shropshire in the month of January, 1823, met her at her father's house, and was shortly after married. We immediately afterwards returned to London, where I resumed my former employment along with John at the establishment of Cover and Lawrence.

In the following year John married also, but we continued together in the same employment for two years longer, when with the view of bettering our circumstances we opened a small place of business on our own account; but, not withstanding our utmost efforts, the speculation failed to realize our expectations. We did not then understand that young men without friends have but slender chances of success in setting up for themselves a business like ours in such a place as London.
During the greater part of my stay in London I devoted every spare hour to the study of the higher principles of the art of building. I carefully studied the works of Nicholson, Tredgold, and others on the science of construction, the strength of materials, etc., read all the works I could procure upon engineering, the steam engine, and machinery; also those upon the principles of architecture and the fine arts.

Having as before stated left my address with Mr. Wilkins, I was, in 1826, favored with a letter from him, saying that, if I still felt a desire to be engaged as a clerk of the works, he had something in view which might suit me; and if I would meet him at the town of Huntingdon, he could there point out the duties I should have to perform if I entered into the engagement. I attended at the appointed time and place, and found he was about to build a prison for the county of Huntingdon. Having examined into my fitness for the situation, he engaged me at a salary of four pounds per week, to take charge of the plans, and see that the work was performed by the contractor in accordance with the drawings and specifications.

I was highly delighted with my situation, being the first employment I had ever had that held out a prospect of advancing my position in life...

In a year after our marriage our first child was born, which was a boy, but he died in early infancy; our second was a girl, who lived to the age of four years; our third was my dear son James, the only one now left; he was born at Huntingdon on the 25th September, 1827, and was christened in the picturesque old church of that town; our fourth was a girl, born after our return to London, but died in early childhood.

My next neighbor at Huntingdon was Mr. Robert Carruthers, a literary man, who carried on the business of a bookbinder at the same place with the management of the country school.... This excellent man was of much service to me in the way of obtaining the use of books. I became a member of a debating society and of a social club; I also joined a Masonic lodge, and, during the two years of my stay at Huntingdon, my knowledge of life and of the ways of society became much enlarged....

The building of the prison having been at length completed, I received an encouraging offer to return to London and superintend the building of a range of houses in South Street, near Park Lane, agreeably to plans made by Mr. John Deering, Architect; I accepted the offer, and returned to London with my family in June, 1828. I applied myself assiduously to study, and before my engagement at those houses had terminated, I was employed by several persons about that quarter of London to furnish plans for new buildings and alterations to old ones.
I clearly perceived, however, that though I might in time succeed in a small way and to a limited extent, I could never reckon upon any great success in London without the patronage of people in high station; and as with such people I had no influence, I saw it was hopeless to expect much success in that direction.

But having heard that any person well acquainted with the practice of building, as well as having a fair knowledge of architecture as an art, could scarcely fail of success in the United States of America, I therefore came to the conclusion that there lay the proper field for my labours.

Not having seen my native home in Ireland for ten years, I made a visit to my father and relations before setting out for the New World.

On my return to London I soon made the necessary preparations for crossing the Atlantic, and left the St. Catherine's docks on the eighth of February, 1832, on board an American ship called the Louisiana. We had a tedious and stormy voyage of sixty-five days, but landed safely in New York....

I left my wife and family in London to reside with John and his family, and set out alone as a pioneer to find in what part of America I was most likely to meet with a desirable place to make a settlement.
On my arrival at New York on the 14th of April, 1832, I considered a large city as the most likely place to expect employment in my profession, but here I found that the majority of the people could with difficulty be made to understand what was meant by a professional architect. The builders, that is, the carpenters and bricklayers, all called themselves architects, and were at that time the persons to whom owners of property applied when they required plans for building. The builder hired some poor draftsman, of whom there were a half a dozen in New York at that time, to make the plans, paying him a mere trifle for his services. The drawings so made were, it is true, but of little value, and some proprietors built without having any regular plan. When they wanted a house built they looked around for one already finished, which they thought suitable for their purpose; and then bargained with a builder to erect for them such another, or one with such alterations upon the model as they might point out. All this was soon changed, however, and architects began to be employed by proprietors before going to the builders; and in this way, in a short time, the style of buildings public and private showed signs of rapid improvement.

There was at that time, properly speaking, only one architect's office in New York, kept by Town and Davis. Town had been a carpenter, but was no draftsman... Davis, his partner, was no mechanic, but was a good draftsman and possessed much taste as an artist. He had furnished the plans for many of the public buildings in some of the states of that time.

There was a Mr. Dakin, a young man of genius, who had been a carpenter and had studied architecture in Towns office; at the time of my arrival, he had opened an office of his own, where he made drawings for the builders; from him I obtained the first employment I had in America, and as he found me much better acquainted with business in general than any of the draftsmen at that time in New York, he proposed to employ me at four dollars per day; so I went into his office and remained there for several months.

As soon as I had thus procured employment I wrote for my wife and son, who with John and his family came out and joined me at New York, in the month of July, 1832....

There was at that time in New York a draftsman called Lafever, who had been in the employment of a builder; he came to me and proposed to join me as a partner in opening an architects office; he said he had an extensive connection of influential friends, who would patronize us in business.

After some consideration I agreed to his proposal and we opened an office in Clinton Hall, where we obtained from the builders orders for as many drawings as we could well make; but I found it very disagreeable work, and so badly rewarded, that I began to cast about and see if there was no other way by which I could improve my situation, and escape from this horse-in-a-mill routine of grinding out drawings for the builders.

Perceiving that there was no such thing as a Builders' Price Book at New York, I fancied that if I published one upon a plan similar to that of London, it might if not profitable be at least the means of making my name known among the builders throughout the country; I therefore set to work, and in four months produced the "American Builders' Price Book." As a speculation I only lost money by it, but indirectly it was of much service to me. To show with what energy I strove to get forward at that period, I got up a course of lectures on architecture, with illustrative drawings, which I read a few times in public, but with no other advantage than of making my name better known among the people.

It was then intimated to me by persons who had been to the south, that New Orleans would be a much better place for me to settle in than New York, if I could only bear the climate; for, though mercantile men went down there from the north every year, they generally remained during the winter months only, and returned northward in the summer to escape the yellow fever; this they continued to do until they had in some degree become acclimatized; but an architect could not do this; he must remain all the summer from his first beginning, as that was the season when buildings were chiefly erected in New Orleans.
Lafever and I having then dissolved our co-partnership, I left with him the collection of various outstanding debts due to our firm, but of which I never received any part from him afterwards.

Having determined to run the hazard of New Orleans, I prepared without delay to go there, and make a trial, leaving my family in the meantime at New York; so that, in October, 1834, I set off by sea, accompanied by a young man, a brother of the Mr. Dakin before mentioned. We landed at Mobile, where we remained for a few weeks, until the yellow fever had for that season disappeared from New Orleans. We then went there, and hired an office on Canal Street, hung its walls with plans and drawings, and began to look out for something to do.

The corporation of the city of Mobile having decided upon building a town hall, advertised for plans, and we made a design for it which obtained the first prize of three hundred dollars; though but a trifle, it seemed to place our names before the public: but in consequence of a fire, by which a large portion of Mobile was destroyed, the hall was never built. We made plans for a church, and for a public school, which were erected there, and are still the most important looking buildings in Government Street.

A company having been at that time formed for erecting a large hotel in New Orleans, which was afterwards named the "Saint Charles." The owner of the ground, Mr. John Hagan, was president of the company; he, as well as several of the chief shareholders were Irish merchants, who had been established in business there for many years; these gentlemen welcomed me as a countryman, and treated me with great kindness. I made a design for the new hotel, which gave general satisfaction; the committee adopted it, and engaged me to superintend its erection. I demanded for my services a per-centage upon the cost of the building as was usual in such cases in England; but to this they would not consent, but finally agreed to pay me ten thousand dollars for the plans, drawings and superintendence. As all the stone work, the greater part of the joiners' work and iron work, had at that time to be prepared at the north, involving a vast amount of drawing and writing, and as the time required for the erection extended over a space of three years, the amount of compensation was not nearly as much as it should have been; but I gained reputation by it, which brought in other business that paid better.

The soil of the lower part of Louisiana being wholly alluvial, intermingled with trunks and roots of old trees which had for ages been brought down by the Mississippi River and deposited along its margin, may be literally said to be afloat, as water everywhere in the vicinity of New Orleans is found at a foot or two below the surface of the ground when the river is high; this causes much trouble with heavy buildings, as the walls sink down to a depth proportioned to their height. The only way to prevent unequal settlement is to make the width of the foundation commensurate with the height of the walls and the weight which each wall will have to bear; the deeper the foundation is dug, the less capable will it be to support superincumbent weight. I found the best way was to expand the base of the foundation in proportion to the intended height of the walls. For the hotel, I had reckoned on a foot and a half for sinking, but as it continued to go down for five years after it was built, it sunk a foot more than I had allowed before it finally stopped. The progress of the building was much retarded the first summer by the number of deaths that occurred among the workmen from sun stroke or yellow fever; the loss of life from these causes was truly appalling. In addition to this source of trouble I was forced to act not only as the architect, but also as clerk of the works and foreman mechanic in each of the trades engaged in the building, as the only men who could at that time be had knew little or nothing of building beyond the most common structures. I had therefore to direct every movement in each department, by which my employment became very arduous and onerous.

The hotel was finished in 1836, and when completed had entrances from three different streets; the principal one was on St. Charles Street. The basement story consisted of shops and offices which were rented to various occupants. The principal entrances were gained by a flight of granite steps at each end of a projecting platform, on which stood a Corinthian portico, having an inner range of columns, with a deep recess behind them, where the entrance doors were placed.
In the centre of the structure was an octagonal building, which, extending above the roofs, was terminated by a circular order of columns, and surmounted by a dome that produced a fine effect, and could be seen at a great distance from every side on approaching the city. In the basement story of the octagon was placed the bar-room, where an extensive counter was constantly supplied with various kinds of eatables, furnished gratis to any one who chose to pay for one of those drinks or compounds for which American bar-rooms are celebrated; many a "man about town" lived nearly altogether at this, or at other bar-rooms, and frequently cut short his life by habits of intemperance, first acquired and afterwards kept up by establishments of this description.

On the principal story were placed the dining rooms, the saloons, the private parlours, and the drawing rooms; the kitchens and all the working parts of the establishment, as well as the bathing rooms, were situated in the back wing; there were rooms to lodge and accommodate nearly five hundred people, and the hotel, taken as a whole, was acknowledged by all who then saw it to be the most complete and beautiful structure of the kind that had up to that period been erected in America.

During my first summer in New Orleans, besides the St. Charles Hotel, I was engaged to furnish plans for and superintend the building of a merchants' exchange on Royal Street, which was afterwards converted into the Post-office; the design for the dome and roof over the large room was somewhat peculiar and caused a good deal of criticism among the builders. There was a Mr. Nicholls, who had for some time previously been the state architect and engineer; he pronounced that the building, if constructed according to my design, would be insecure and the dome could not stand. The building committee, on hearing this, desired me to have the plans altered, but I refused to do this, and invited Mr. Nicholls to discuss the safety of the design scientifically in presence of the committee; but as he declined to do so, I drew up a statement showing in detail, on principles laid down by Tredgold and others, that every part of the construction had been carefully considered and duly provided for: the committee were satisfied, and desired me to go on with the work, which I did; everything was finished in due time, and has remained firm and secure to the present day. My reputation having gained some advantage by this discussion, I soon had applications from other parties for as many plans and contracts as I could possibly attend to.

Having passed through the summer of 1835 without taking the yellow fever, I thought all danger from it for that year had gone by, when late in November, having been much exposed to the weather on a damp cold day, I was in the evening seized by a chill fit, followed by violent fever; a doctor was sent for, who bled me profusely; he returned next day bringing another doctor with him and bled me again; they then considered my case a very perilous one and called in a third;
and the three continued to visit me three times a day to the sixth night, by which time the disease had reached a crisis and I became delirious, but on the following morning had subsided and I was then so feeble that I could not move a muscle nor make any voice heard. By the several bleedings, cuppings, and leechings it was computed that I had in four days lost ninety six ounces of blood, and had taken nearly one hundred grains of calomel in one dose; this produced an effect which everything else had failed to do. That was one of the methods adopted in the treatment for yellow fever in those days; but every year the fever assumed a different type, and required a different mode of treatment; it was only by observing the greatest care and prudence that I was enabled to leave my room at the end of three weeks, after the fever had left me.

During my absence, the building committee of the hotel devoted to me the most unceasing attention; nothing that care or physic could accomplish was left undone, and to this circumstance I chiefly attributed my recovery.

On resuming business again I found myself overwhelmed by difficulties in procuring the services of good workmen to carry out the various contracts I had in hand: I found that mechanics who understood their business, even only tolerably well, preferred taking small contracts on their own account to working for others, so that those who were to be had for hire knew little or nothing of their business, and required constant supervision and instruction. I had at the time a foreman carpenter who was a very good mechanic; but he, then taking advantage of the circumstances, told me he had received an offer from a man who was long established in business to be taken in as a partner, but that he would prefer remaining with me, if I offered him a similar arrangement; otherwise, he must leave me. Situated as I then was, I felt myself compelled to agree to the terms of his demand; so I took him in as a partner, having one-third interest in the building department of my business, but not in the architectural. He remained with me for three years, but disputes and bickerings having frequently arisen between us, we agreed to separate, and I was made happy on finding myself once again the sole master of my own affairs.

I then engaged as foreman a young Englishman who had been a stairbuilder in my employment for some time previously: he made an excellent foreman, was a most trustworthy person in every way, and remained with me as long as I continued in business.

I also engaged as bookkeeper a most estimable young man who had been brought up in the office of a wine merchant in London; he was intelligent and worthy of all confidence; so that he also remained with me as long as I continued in business.

At the solicitation of my architectural partner, Mr. Charles Dakin, his brother James came from New York in 1835 and they proposed that he should join us as a partner in the office; but I doubted whether three of us could agree together in such a business as ours. I therefore proposed to withdraw and leave the office to them, stipulating, however, that as the St. Charles Hotel and the Post office were exclusively my own designs, I should continue to superintend them until completed; we separated upon these conditions. I paid over to Charles his proportion of what had been received by us from the commencement, and I left with them all the unfinished business in the office. They continued to practice successfully for a year or two, when Charles removed to and opened a branch office at Mobile, where among other business he made a contract to build a range of brick stores and warehouses; but, whether from the want of sufficient experience as a builder or proper care in the construction, the whole range of buildings tumbled down while the roofs were being put on: this misfortune so preyed upon the spirits of the poor fellow, that, happening to take a severe cold, a rapid disease of the lungs followed, which carried him off in little more than a year.

Having by this time bought some lots of ground fronting on Common and Carondelet Streets in New Orleans, I there established my office and workshops, and occupied them as long as I remained in business.

A plan having been made by Dakin for a new Catholic church in Camp Street, he was employed by the committee to superintend its erection; but, when the walls of the building had reached nearly to the roof, a disagreement between Dakin and the managers took place, and he withdrew from the undertaking. After much delay, the managers employed me to finish the structure; but before the walls of the tower had risen above the roof, they began to settle down toward one side, from a defective foundation; so that I had to take out the old foundation and put in a new one, without pulling down the walls; this caused much trouble and expense, but I finally succeeded in accomplishing it, so that it has stood firmly to the present day.

The whole of the interior arrangements, the groined ceilings, the altar, the organ, etc. were erected after my designs and under my superintendence.

I had been much embarrassed for some time in procuring timber for the various buildings I had in hand; the sawmills were few in number, and the demands upon them so great, that buildings were often much delayed from this cause. Mr. Thomas Barrett, a well-known merchant of the city, and president of a bank, had a sawmill at Lafayette where I was in the habit of getting much of the timber required for my contracts, wanting to dispose of this mill, proposed to sell it to me, and took much pains in pointing out the many advantages I should derive from having full command of the establishment.

There were two men who for some years had conducted the business of the mill for him: the one, called Walsh, was the manager;
the other, called Burdon, was the bookkeeper; both lived upon the premises; and Barrett, giving them excellent characters, strongly advised that I should join with them in the business of the mill and in the purchase of the property on which it stood, and to allow them a liberal salary for managing the business. I took the advice of some friends upon it, and in an unlucky hour I decided upon entering into the speculation.

The property consisted of three squares of ground, twenty-five Negroes, a stock of horses, mules, etc., the sawmill with steam engine and machinery, all in tolerably good working condition; the price was one hundred and forty thousand dollars; for which we gave jointly our promissory notes, bearing interest at six per cent per annum, payable by installments extending over five years; and had my partners acted honestly in the business, it would have been a profitable speculation for all concerned in it. During the first six months the profits amounted to twenty-thousand dollars, and everything went on very hopefully; but for the next six months the profits did not much exceed half that sum: Walsh and Burdon accounted for this great falling off by saying the machinery was growing old and required frequent repairs, by which the work was retarded; at the end of every succeeding six months the apparent profits kept regularly diminishing, though the mill was in full operation; and as the profits no longer sufficed to liquidate the notes given for the property as they became due. The interest upon them was accumulating, and the firm was rapidly drifting into debt. I frequently, along with my bookkeeper, examined the books of the firm, but after the most rigid investigation, no errors were discovered by which I could prove, though I strongly suspected, nefarious practices by the managing partners. Things went on in this way for a space of three years, at the end of which time, Burdon was killed by being accidentally thrown from his gig. Walsh then evinced the greatest alarm upon finding that of thirty thousand dollars worth of landed property bought by Burdon for himself and Walsh conjointly, in the course of those three years, the whole appeared to stand exclusively in the name of Burdon, and Walsh could show no title to any part of it; so that, with the view of trying to recover some portion of it, he produced several memorandum that had been kept by Burdon, and were filled with entries of lots of timber sold by him to various persons for cash at the mill, but of which he had entered no part in the books of the firm; this accounted for my inability to discover their frauds by examining the books. Walsh pretended to have just discovered these memorandums among Burdon's private papers, and said he was until then wholly unacquainted with their existence, and now proposed that I should join him in suit against Burdon's estate, for restitution of the funds of which he had swindled the firm. Being convinced, however, that both one and the other had been equally concerned in the fraud, I first of all secured those memorandums, placed them in court for safe keeping, and then entered suit against the estates of Walsh and Burdon in solido for the amount of what they had cheated me.
As soon as Walsh found me determined to sue him, he made simulated sales of all the property that had anywhere stood in his name, including a cotton plantation, to a cousin of his who lived upon the plantation at some distance up the river. He then commenced an energetic defence against my suit, to prevent a judgment from being recorded against him for the space of two years from the date of the sales, as by a law of Louisiana, a sale could not be set aside after two years had elapsed from its date, excepting where a judgment from a court could be recorded against it before the end of that time. So that, when I had at last obtained a judgment for sixty thousand dollars against Walsh and Burdon, it was too late, for no property belonging to Walsh could then be found that I could legally touch; and as for Burdon's estate, so many privileged creditors appeared that very little of it was left for any one.

Walsh, having then retired to his plantation, demanded from his cousin a reconveyance of the property with which he had intrusted him; but this the latter refused to do; the property stood now in his name, and he said he intended to keep it so. On this Walsh became perfectly furious; he lost all self-control, took to drinking brandy, went about with a bottle in his pocket, and a gun on his arm, in a state of absolute frenzy, awaiting the re-appearance of his cousin who had fled from the plantation. After several days passed in this manner, Walsh suddenly disappeared; but within a week a body was found floating in the river, about sixty miles below the plantation, which on being examined proved to be that of Walsh shot through the heart by a charge of buck shot; his cousin was suspected of the murder, but as no proof could be adduced against him he was permitted to go at large. Such was the end of those two men by whom I had been cheated and robbed in so villanous a manner, and adds one more proof to the truth, of the saying, that "honesty is the best policy."

Having at length obtained exclusive possession of the sawmill and its appendages, I tried energetically to clear off the debts with which it was encumbered, and was making satisfactory progress when the mill took fire and was totally burnt down. I fortunately had it insured for two-thirds of its value; and I now consulted the holders of the mortgage notes upon it as to the most prudent course to be pursued. I proposed to sell the whole property by auction in separate lots, the proceeds of which, along with the amount insured, ought to clear off all the debts upon it. The creditors agreed to this. I caused a sale to be made of everything belonging to it, paid off the claims against me, and after infinite trouble got clear of the unfortunate speculation, which had absorbed the produce of a lucrative business for ten of the best years of my life, between the ages of thirty-five and forty-five years.

I set to work again with renewed energy, if not a wiser, a more prudent man; and in the course of years succeeded in realizing sufficient property for the supply of all reasonable wants.

In the autumn of 1836 my wife and son came to me from New York, with John and his family, and remained with me during the winter; but as soon as the hot weather of summer set in my wife and son both became so ill that the doctors advised their departure for the north. John and his family were also equally anxious to go northward; they had not prospered in New Orleans, for while in the winter he was visiting a planing machine his foot was caught by the machinery, and so much injured as to keep him on crutches for several months. They, therefore, all set off together by sea for New York, where John and his family have continued to reside to the present time.

My wife having taken up her residence at New York concluded to remain there and attend to the care and the education of our only son; who was, after a year or two, sent to an institute established on Long Island by the Reverend Doctor Hawks, and there remained with few intermissions until that establishment was closed in 1843.

While engaged at building the St. Charles Hotel, I made several contracts for building houses and stores for various other parties, and then introduced the system of ten hours' labour for a day's work; this was hailed by the men as a great amelioration, as the custom up to that time had been to work from sunrise to sunset, which was very distressing to the men in the hot days of summer, without, upon the whole, producing any greater amount of work. I also established another custom, that of paying every man the full amount of his wages.
at the end of every second week. By these means I acquired so much popularity, that I could always command the services of the best men in each department and thus accomplish a greater amount of business in a given time, of better quality and with less trouble to myself, than could any other builder at that time in the city. I let out the brickwork, stone work, plastering, painting, slating, and ironwork, to persons already established in those several trades, and I made it a practice to employ the same people, when possible, in each department, as long as I remained in business. I mention these particulars for the purpose of showing how I was enabled to conduct so large a business with so few assistants as I at any time had with me, and especially in such a climate as that of New Orleans.

While living in London, where every inch of building ground is turned to the best account, I had some experience in contriving to make the most of small spaces, and I now turned this knowledge to good advantage. There were three gentlemen who owned, among them, one lot of ground of no very great extend, and consulted me as to the best mode of improving it. One of them said in a jocular way he should like three good houses built upon it. I took the hint, and made a plan for three houses, which appeared so feasible that they made a contract with me to build them, and when finished the owners expressed the highest satisfaction, and called them the "three sisters."

LETTER OF FRANKLIN MARION GENTRY TO FRANCIS P. WILSHAW
RELATIVE TO CHARLES MINN THRUSTON AND WILLIAM HENRY
DANGERFIELD - PLANTATION OWNERS OF THE BATTLEFIELD AREA
Mr. Francis Wilshin, Historian,
National Park Service,
c/o Fredericksburg National Military Park,
Fredericksburg, Va.

Dear Mr. Wilshin;

I am very grateful indeed for your letter of recent date in reply to my inquiry of Aug. 5, 1951, and my letter of May 25, 1951, addressed to Mr. Russell A. Gibbs, Superintendent of Chalmette National Historical Park, which he forwarded to you. The delay in my reply has been to enable me to have the short biography of Col. Charles Mynn Thruston typewritten. Your letter with its inclosures certainly answers very extensively, conclusively and authoritatively the question which I asked. I am also particularly glad to have the copy of Lafon's survey map of 1808 which according to the deed of 1813 was attached thereto by the Thruston heirs.

First of all let me say that the name is Thruston, not Thurston, at least not since 1580 in England. I am a direct descendant of Rev. & Col. Charles Mynn Thruston and the family have for fourteen generations been very particular about the spelling of the name and it is pronounced exactly as spelled. In fact the motto on the coat-of-arms is "Thrust On".

I inclose a sketch upon which I have drawn to scale the survey points from Lafon's 1808-1813 map superimposed upon the map of the Battlefield (drawn to the same scale) as taken from a folder published by the Chalmette National Historical Park. It is obvious from this map that the Thruston plantation comprised almost the entire Battlefield of Jan. 8, 1815, and extended beyond the Chalmette residence. In fact the Master house shown on Lafon's map falls just about on top of the Chalmette residence and plantation houses shown on the historical map. Thus obviously the Thruston mansion was the Chalmette residence at the time of the Battle of New Orleans. This is confirmatory of the tradition in the Thruston family that Col. Charles M. Thruston owned and died on Chalmette plantation, dying in the residence there and buried a short distance southeast of it. Note that the house on Lafon's map is not drawn to scale and obviously only approximately located on the map. There are no survey lines or distances noted to locate it exactly and the house is drawn about 7 toises in length (420 ft.), an obvious exaggeration. At that time it would certainly be unlikely that the Thruston and Chalmette houses would be located so close together, especially as the Thruston property included a mill and a number of other buildings, such as are indicated on the historical map. There is no doubt whatever in my mind that the Thruston mansion later became known and was occupied before the Battle by the Chalmettes. As far as I can make out, the old Chalmette property was not a very large plantation sandwiched between the Thruston and Bienvenue plantations until the Chalmettes acquired the former in 1813.

I would guess that the Master house on Lafon's map was probably further back from the river than approximately shown by him on his map. In my opinion, relying upon the note found in the R. C. Ballard Thruston papers in the archives of the Filson Club, the grave of Col. Charles M. Thruston must be located about 2,500 ft. southeast of the National Monument and probably at about the present levee edge or possibly 200-300 ft. out in the river southeast of the location of the Chalmette (Thruston) residence. It is of course possible that the grave was removed, owing to the inroads of the river, when the present levee was built, or otherwise. This removal might account for the tradition that he lies beneath the National Monument.

I can give you very little about Henry Dangerfield except the following: He was called Henry in the will of Col. Thruston, who was his father-in-law, and elsewhere in several legal papers he is called Henry. However, genealogies refer to him as William. He had a double name apparently and I have seen it stated that he was William Henry Dangerfield. He was from Winchester, Va., and on Aug. 10, 1794, in Frederick Co., Va., married Elizabeth Mynn Thruston. She was born April 6, 1775, in Frederick Co., Va. Henry Dangerfield went to Mississippi about 1808/9 with Col. Charles M. Thruston and his brother-in-law, George Flowerdew Norton, who married another of Col. Thruston's daughters (I am descended from him). They were all close friends of David Holmes, first Territorial Governor of Mississippi who prevailed upon them to migrate from Virginia to Mississippi. I think Dangerfield was in the army for a short period for there is an affidavit concerning him in the Thruston-Weeks-Conrad papers in the archives of the Univ. of La. at Baton Rouge which mentions a conversation with him at a cantonment at Washington, Miss. around 1810/11. He was the first Secretary of the State (or Territory) of Mississippi. His obituary appears in the "Mississippi Republican", Natchez, Miss., issue of Mar. 1, 1815, but I have not looked it up to get the exact date of his death. There was a William Dangerfield who died near Natchez in 1820, who may have been his son. His widow was living in Natchez, Miss., in 1835, but I do not know when she died. They were survived by one daughter who married Gen. Felix Houston (not Sam) of the Texas Army. This is all that I know about them.

It so happens that I have just completed a short one-page biography of Rev. & Col. Charles Mynn Thruston and a one-page bibliography of references to him, a copy of which I am pleased to inclose. He was a distinguished clergyman, soldier and patriot. He was a close friend of George Washington (one of his daughters married into the Washington family and lies buried in the cemetery at Mt. Vernon adjoining Washington's tomb), an associate of Patrick Henry, kinsman of George Wythe of Williamsburg, Va., signer of the Declaration of Independence, and of Edmund and Peyton Randolph, Virginia patriots, kinsman of Robert Carter Nicholas, Treasurer of the Colony and first Treasurer of the State of Virginia, etc., etc. It is a shame that his final resting place goes unmarked with memorials being erected to much lesser lights who gave so little to their country. Mrs. G. G. de Coligny, of New Orleans agrees with me that his situation should be corrected. Can you do anything to further the project?

Thanking you for your help, I am,

Yours very truly,

(SGD.) FRANKLIN M. GENTRY

REV. AND COL. CHARLES MYNN THURSTON was born Nov. 6, 1738, in Gloucester Co., Va., the son of Col. John Thruston and his wife Sarah Mynne. He married first Mary Buckner and second Ann Alexander, leaving descendants by both wives. He died March 21, 1812, on his plantation at Chalmette, St. Bernard Parish, La. He completed his education at William and Mary College in 1754 and in 1758 served as Lieutenant of Provincials under Gen. Forbes in the French and Indian Wars, taking part in the expedition to capture Fort Duquesne (now Pittsburgh) after Gen. Braddock's defeat. Later he became a Captain of Colonial Militia. He served as Vestryman of Petsworth Parish, Gloucester Co., Va., and after a few years went to England to study for the ministry. After taking Holy Orders in 1765 from the Bishop of London, he returned to Gloucester Co., Va., and became Minister of Petsworth Parish until 1768 when he removed to Frederick Co., Va., where he served as Minister of Frederick Parish until 1777. He was Chairman of Committee of Safety of Frederick Co., Va., in 1774; Representative in the Virginia Conventions in 1775-6; and Member of the Court of Commissioners in 1776. From his pulpit and elsewhere he espoused the cause of American Independence, harangued the youth of the community to join the army, and was active in the procurement of military provisions and supplies. At the start of hostilities, he laid aside his clergyman's robes and at his own expense organized a company of volunteers of which he was elected Captain, thereafter becoming known as "The Fighting Parson of the Revolution". With his company he marched to New Jersey to join the forces of Gen. George Washington. He was promoted to Colonel, Jan. 15, 1777, of one of the additional Continental Regiments under the immediate command of Gen. George Washington. At the Battle of Piscataway, near Amboy, N. J., on March 8, 1777, he led his troops into action against vastly superior numbers and had an arm shattered in the engagement. His son, then only eleven years old, served as his aide. Virginia was unable to recruit sufficient men to complete Thruston's Regiment, whereupon it was consolidated with Gist's First Continental Regiment and Col. Thruston resigned Jan. 1, 1779, as a supernumerary. He continued to support the cause of American Freedom and was active in the affairs of Virginia. He was Member of Committee to Outfit Troops in 1781; Member of the House of Delegates, Continental Congress in 1781; Justice of Frederick Co., Va., in 1790; and was successively a founding Trustee of Warm Springs, Va. (now Berkley Springs, Morgan Co., W. Va.); Boonesborough, Ky. (although he never went there); and Front Royal, Va. In 1808 he moved south, stopping for about two years in Tennessee and Mississippi, then moving on to New Orleans, La. He lies buried on his plantation at Chalmette, the Battle of New Orleans having been fought over his grave. A short time before the battle his heirs sold the plantation embracing most of the battlefield, to Ignace Delino DeChalmette.

LETTER FROM KARL L. TREVER, CHIEF
INTERIOR RECORDS SECTION NATIONAL ARCHIVES TO SUPT. RUSSEL A. GIBBS,
CHALMETTE NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK
February 6, 1951

Russel A. Gibbs, Supt.,
Chalmette National Historical Park
N. P. Service, Department of the Interior,
Box 185, Arabi, 16, Louisiana

Dear Mr. Gibbs:

This is in reply to your letter of January 22, 1951, requesting information concerning the erection of the memorial monument on the Chalmette Battlefield.

An examination of the records of the National Park Service in the National Archives has produced the statement that the Chalmette Monument was originally designed by Newton Richards, whose plans, were accepted by the Jackson Monument Association in May 1855. According to the above-mentioned statement the original construction of the monument was begun by the association mentioned, under authority of the State of Louisiana. According to another document, a report dated May 17, 1856, the state of Louisiana on February 19, 1855, purchased a tract of land to preserve and commemorate the battlefield and work on the monument was begun the same year by the state itself. Both documents agree that the monument was not completed at that time.

By act No. 41 of the session of 1902, the legislature of Louisiana agreed to transfer to the United States the Chalmette Monument and the surrounding ground where was fought the battle with the British on January 8, 1815, providing that within five years the Federal Government would make an appropriation sufficient to complete the monument.

By act of Congress approved March 4, 1907, an appropriation of $25,000 was made for the completion of the monument. The design of the memorial was approved by the Secretary of War on May 17, 1907, and the work concerning the construction and the disbursement of funds was assigned to the United States Engineers of the War Department. On December 7, 1907, a contract for the completion of the monument was made with M. P. Doullut, of New Orleans. Work was commenced on January 16, 1908, and was completed by the contractor in December 1908. During March 1909 the custody of the monument was transferred to the "United Daughters of the Revolution and 1812," as required by the act of March 4, 1907, under authority of a letter from the Secretary of War dated March 5, 1909.

During November 1912 the "Association, United Daughters 1776-1812," reported that certain repairs were needed. These repairs consisted of furnishing and attaching two marble panels and 14 other panels to brick work with bronze expansion bolts; providing a new brass key for the lock; scraping and painting the ceiling and clearing the lintels in the observation room; repairing the bronze casing of windows, etc.; removing discoloration from the outside above and below the observation windows; and repairing the concrete walk to the monument. At the end of the fiscal year 1913, the repairs were completed with the exception of the placing of a few bolts. These repairs cost $200 and the final payment was made to the contractor on July 25, 1913.

In 1915, the Engineer Officer in charge at New Orleans, Louisiana, was requested to furnish to Colonel William W. Harts, Secretary and Executive Officer of the Commission of Fine Arts, blueprints showing a drawing of the monument drawn to scale. As a result the records received from the Fine Arts Commission contain some blueprints including: "Sheet No. 2, Elevations and Sections of New Work" required for completion of the monument according to the design approved by the Secretary of War, May 17, 1907, and also "Sheet No. 3, View of Completed Monument." Both sheets were drawn under the direction of Captain J. F. McIndoe, United States Corps of Engineers, by Alfred F. Theard, Civil Engineer and Architect of New Orleans, Louisiana.

The records contain more information concerning the Chalmette monument, but no other mention was found concerning its erection. Additional information may possibly be secured from newspapers, the state archives or the state historical society. The deed from the state of Louisiana to the United States was drawn on May 24, 1907, accepted by President Roosevelt on June 5, 1907, and is recorded on folio 248 ff., Conveyance Book No. 21, in the office of the Clerk of Court of St. Bernard Parish, Louisiana.

Very truly yours,

ABSTRACTOR'S NOTE

This abstract is made up by briefing all of the various Acts of Sales as well as all of the Suits and Succession Proceedings that effect the title to the property described in the caption hereof.

The records of the Parish of St. Bernard were burned in approximately the year 1884, therefore the chain of title prior to that date is made up by piecing together the title from the various acts that could be located in the Office of the Register of Conveyances and the Custodian of Notarial Archives for the Parish of Orleans.

The marital status of the parties has been given in all cases where it was shown in the act. If the marital status is not set out in the heading of the various transfers shown herein, it was not disclosed in the transfer.

12th Congress - #193 - 1st Session.

Communicated to the House of Representatives, January 9, 1812.

Treasury Department, January 8, 1812.

Sir:

I have the honor in conformity with the Act respecting claims to land in the Territories of Orleans and Louisiana, to transmit a copy of the report made by the Commissioners for the Eastern District of the Territory of Orleans, on the claims to land within said district which they have not confirmed.* (*The reports now published embrace the claims confirmed, as well as those rejected). On inquiring why the claims in the said report were not arranged into three general classes, as directed by the act aforesaid, I was verbally informed by the Commissioner who delivered the report, that all the claims thus rejected were considered by the Board as belonging to the third class; that is to say, as claims not entitled to confirmation, either under the Acts of Congress, or in conformity with the laws, usages, and customs of the Spanish Government.
A letter subsequently received from another Commissioner is also transmitted.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, sir
Your most obedient servant,

Albert Gallatin

The Honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

"Decisions of the Board of Commissioners of the Eastern District of the Territory of Orleans, of land claims registered in the books of Michael Cantrelle, Deputy Register.

No. 1 - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -
No. 386 - William Brown claims a tract of land, situate on the east side of the Mississippi, in the County of Orleans, containing sixteen arpents, eleven toises and three feet in front, with a depth extending back as far as Lake Borgne, and bounded on the upper side by land of J. M. Pintard, and on the lower by land of Chalmet Delino.

It appears that the front and first depth of forty arpents of this land was actually inhabited and cultivated on the 20th day of December, 1803, and for more than ten consecutive years prior thereto. So much the Board confirm, but reject the claim to the remaining extension of depth."

(COPied FROM ORIGINAL RECORD)

TO THE HONORABLE ROBERT HINGLE, JUDGE OF THE TWENTY-NINTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT COURT IN AND FOR THE PARISH OF ST. BERNARD:

The petition of the New Orleans Terminal Company, here- in appearing through Louis S. Berg, its President, respectfully represents:

That your petitioner is a railroad corporation organized under the laws of the State of Louisiana and domiciled in the City of New Orleans, as will more fully appear by reference to its original Charter, a certified copy of which hereto annexed;

That your petitioner has resolved to build an extensive terminal for the handling of its export and import business in said Parish of St. Bernard, extending from the lower side of the New Orleans Belt & Terminal Company, known as "Chalmette", to the lower limits of the City of New Orleans;

That Mrs. Anna J. McMillan, wife of James M. McMillan, appears upon the public records as the owner of the following (166) described property situated in the Parish of St. Bernard and within the locality above described as that needed for the terminal of your petitioner, to wit:

"A certain tract of land known as the "Battle Ground Saw Mills" together with all the buildings and improvements thereon and all the rights, ways, privileges, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, situated in the said Parish of St. Bernard, in this State, on the left bank of the Mississippi River at about three-fourths (3/4) of a mile below the City of New Orleans, measuring Three (3) arpents front on said Mississippi River by Eighty (80) arpents in depth, between parallel lines, and composed of three lots designated by the Nos. Three (3) Four (4) and Five (5) on a plan drawn by A. D'Hemecourt, late surveyor deposited in the office of Carlisle Pollock, late notary in this city, each of which said lots has One (1) arpent front on said Mississippi River; lot No. Three (3) being bounded on the upper line by lot No. Two (2), now the property of R. T. Beauregard, to which it is contiguous as far as the point marked "P" on said plan, and thence to its rear line by the Provost Plantation, now owned by the State of Louisiana and known as "Chalmette Monument Property", and below by lot No. Four (4); and lot No. Five (5) being bounded on the upper side by lot No. Four (4) and on the lower side by the property formerly belonging to H. C. Delery and now to Fazende Lane and the property now owned by Jean Marie Cougot, subject to the respective rights of way of the New Orleans and Southern and New Orleans and Western Railroad Companies."

That from the said records it appears that the said property was acquired by the said Mrs. Anna J. McMillan, wife of James M. McMillan, from Captain Lafayette Jack, her father, by (167) donation Inter Vivos, and that the said Captain Lafayette Jack is now living; that he has other presumptive heirs, and the said Captain Lafayette Jack is a necessary party to this suit;

That said property is necessary to your petitioner for railroad purposes;

That petitioner hereto annexes a plan of said property as required by law;

That the improvements on said property consist of a frame building together with certain out-houses of small value;

That petitioner cannot agree with the owners of said property as to the price to be paid for the purchase thereof, and the said Mrs. Anna J. McMillan cannot make title thereto on account of the dangers resulting from the possible revendication of this said donation at the death of the donor;

Petitioner further represents that the property sought to be expropriated herein is the land and buildings thereon together with the rights, ways, privileges, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, and specially excepts all crops, chattels, or immovables by destination on the said property.

Wherefore petitioner prays that after due proceedings had, the said property may be adjudged to your petitioner upon the payment to the owners of all such damages as they may sustain in consequence of the expropriation of the same for railroad purposes.

Petitioner further prays that all costs in this proceeding be adjudged against it as well as the taxes for the property for 1903. And petitioner prays for general relief.

ABSTRACTOR'S NOTE

We have made a careful search of the records of the office of the Register of Conveyances for the Parish of Orleans as well as the acts of the various notaries who apparently had dealings concerning the property in this locale and have not been able to find where Auguste Houette and Etienne Villavaso ever disposed of Lot One, nor have we been able to find where Mrs. Celeste Cantrelle ever acquired said Lot One. The acts of Phillippe Toca, Recorder in and for the Parish of St. Bernard for the year 1866 have been destroyed by fire.
