1. Statement of Management's Requirements, Proposed Work, and Its Relationship to Other Facets of the Park Program.

(Provide detail data for 'Management Information' on Form 10-411a, Supplemental Sheet and attach.)

The Pemberton House was built in 1775 by Joseph Pemberton, a Quaker merchant on the east side of Carpenters Court facing Chestnut Street. The reconstruction of the Pemberton House and of New Hall (now reconstructed) on the west side and the Pemberton House on the east side of Carpenters Court will restore the Court to its historic appearance at the time the First Continental Congress met in Carpenters' Hall.

It is proposed to reconstruct the Pemberton House for use as an Army-Navy Museum with funds raised and donated by the Army and Navy.

1. MANAGEMENT INFORMATION

See No. 1 Form 10-411

The Army and Navy have accumulated the sum of $460,600 which, by agreement dated October 8, 1965, will be given to the National Park Service to be used for historical and architectural research, planning and construction of building; planning and installation of museum exhibits in the Pemberton House when reconstructed as a historic structure and Army-Navy Museum to complement New Hall now reconstructed on the west side of Carpenters Court and used as a Marine Museum.

2. TECHNICAL INFORMATION

BODC Architectural Comments - We were concerned over the reduction in construction estimate from $3.25 per cubic foot, which was the basis of our estimate in the previously approved PGP B-117-1, to $2.80 per cu. ft. Part of this reduction is justified in that the earlier proposal contemplated a reconstructed interior as well as exterior. However, it must be remembered that exhibit supports, furring, etc. normally part of such a contract are of special design and expensive. We believe the structure without exhibit furring can be built for between $2.80 and $3.00 per cubic foot or $35.00 per sq. ft. and we recommend that the $140,150 for exhibit acquisition and construction also include the cost of all supports for such exhibits. Accordingly, we have revised the construction estimate upward to $224,000. The historical research estimate was considered excessive and consequently revised downward to $9,790. The museum exhibit item was revised to provide for furring, etc. In summary we believe the entire project can be constructed within the total funds available providing a certain amount of "give and take" is exercised among the professional talents involved. The structure will be built as an interpretive media but in this case the quality or size of the structure, because of its historic nature, cannot be reduced.
CHAPTER II
HISTORICAL DATA

Prepared by Chief of Research John D. R. Platt, Historians Martin I. Yoelson, Paul G. Sifton, Pearl Millman, and Miriam Q. Blimm
Introduction – A House on the Scene of History

It had been the most memorable meeting ever held on the continent. Not since the Stamp Act Congress of 1765 in New York had such a gathering of dignitaries been seen in one place at one time. And during the interval until 1774 the reputations of several of them had grown great as sentiments against the mother country hardened in the colonies and apt voices were rewarded with positions of leadership. The meetings themselves at brand new Carpenters' Hall had taken place in an atmosphere of excitement and suspense as alarm succeeded rumor, bells tolled, and clergymen cautioned and appealed. Everyone agreed that this, the first of the two Continental Congresses, had been a great success. In October 1774 the members held a last, rousing dinner, toasted everyone of merit and every good principle in sight and prepared to journey home. Then all was quiet, for the time being. Philadelphia, a clamorous center of 40,000 people went on about a way of life that for decades had been a tale of trade and growth. The fenced-in courtyard before Carpenters' Hall fell silent on off-nights, the special committees and their long, candle-lit deliberations gone.

Three months passed. In the middle of the winter season when importations ceased and everyone in trade had struck the balances on unsettled accounts, leaving time for other things, a merchant named Joseph Pemberton offered to buy the lot to the left of the alleyway leading from Carpenters' Hall to Chestnut Street. Development of the company's lot had been a matter of concern to its members for some time, and from their viewpoint a more desirable purchaser could hardly have been found. Pemberton, sole surviving male heir of one of the province's leaders, wealthy Israel Pemberton, and himself a member of standing in the community, wanted to build a fine home upon the lot.

From the time Joseph Pemberton first conceived building a house in that location, it was surrounded by those activities associated with the nation's origins. The neighboring courtyard was to serve as the hub of supply operations during the Revolutionary War and later a setting for the War Department. Men and agencies deeply involved in the conduct of government were to meet in the Hall or use the facilities of the Library Company on its second floor.

As the decision to reconstruct the Joseph Pemberton House had already been made on the administrative level, it was agreed in April 1966 not to prepare a Part I Historic Structures Report. And as the reconstruction is to be authentic on the exterior only, allowing for the best possible division, as a museum, of the interior, it might appear that historical research would be greatly simplified. That this has not proved to be the case, is the consequence of several factors of note. For one thing, the house was taken down or radically altered just before the era of the camera reached that stage when buildings of more than usual interest began to be photographed. As one of a great many fine houses in a city having more than the usual number, it received all too little attention from artists and engravers. Papers of the Pemberton family are plentiful at the Historical Society of Pennsylvania and they have proved valuable. Few of them, however, relate directly to Joseph Pemberton. There is no separate collection bearing his name. Personal glimpses are few and far between in the papers of a family headed by three strong-charactered brothers of the earlier generation who overshadowed all later Pembertons. Account books for the period when the house was under construction are not among the family papers, and vouchers for work done on it are almost non-existent. Finally, the story of the Joseph Pemberton House has become enmeshed in the tangled affairs of an eighteenth-century bankrupt who died intestate. This has necessitated the unravelling of unexplained, sometimes unexplainable, papers in the family collection, a hunt through eighteenth-century statute books to establish procedures then required by law, and a special search for court records detailing proceedings. The crumbling state of common pleas court records defeated one promising lead. Yet from this often intriguing, often discouraging search has come materials enough, in the historians' opinion, for a highly authentic reconstruction, one that will do full justice to the historically-important setting the house will enjoy in front of Carpenters' Hall.

The Pembertons of Philadelphia

The first Pembertons came to the New World on the Submission among Quakers of the exodus in 1682. They settled above Philadelphia on the Delaware, but their son Israel was educated in Philadelphia and apprenticed to Samuel Carpenter, one of Pennsylvania's earliest merchants of great wealth. From this start he himself rose to first rank among the city's merchants and leadership in the Society of Friends. For twenty years he sat in the provincial Assembly. His three sons, Israel, Jr.
James (1715-1779), James (1723-1809), and John (1727-1795), enjoyed the advantages his position conferred upon them and struggled with the responsibilities in difficult times that befell their religious order. John's life was spent in the interest of the faith. Israel and James succeeded to their father's position of influence in public affairs. In the words of Poulson's American Daily Advertiser on the occasion of James' death (issue of April 6, 1809) they formed a "...worthy triumvirate, commonly called the Pemberton's of Philadelphia."

The younger Israel Pemberton showed himself so able and eloquent as in time to head the Quaker faction in the politics of the province, picking up the sobriquet along the way of "king of the Quakers." He made his way so well in trade that he was able to abandon its pursuit early in life to devote himself to other matters. Through extensive contacts among Quakers in London, Dublin, the West Indies, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Delaware, and elsewhere in the colonies, through regular service as clerk of meetings, through tireless espousing of such Quaker causes as friendly relations with the Indians and manumission of slaves, he assumed unchallenged position.

Yet, almost from the beginning in the larger affairs of the province, he found himself an opposition leader. Despite his great strength of character and firmness on matters of principle he was swamped by irresistible forces in the society and politics of the growing colony. By 1755 the Quakers had lost political control. In time they were to discourage members from holding office. He maneuvered to retain as much as possible of their influence. A believer in the rights of the colonists after 1763, he, nevertheless, opposed Independence and championed the policy of non-cooperation among the Quakers during the Revolution. He was banished to Virginia, in time of danger, and died not long after his return.

Israel Pemberton's biographer, Theodore Thayer, has concluded that this was all to a purpose, that he "...more than any other, molded the thoughts and directed the course of American Quakerism during its years of greatest trial and opposition...the Quakers of Israel Pemberton's generation contributed much to the development of republican government and the rights of persons and minorities...their contribution...was one of the principle fountains from which American humanitarian progress has drawn."[1]

Pemberton married twice, first Sarah Kirkbride by whom he had a son of his name, daughters Mary and Sarah, and Joseph; and second, the widow Mary Jordan, by whom he had a son, Charles. His son Israel died a minor in 1764, Charles in 1772. The family lived very well. Israel Pemberton's mansion just west of Third Street on Chestnut had long held a reputation as one of the finest older houses in the city. Known earlier as Clarke Hall, it had for years before 1731 been the residence of Andrew Hamilton, defender of Peter Zenger in the famous New York "freedom of the press" trial and builder of Independence Hall. As Pemberton's seat it had reached its zenith, where could be found a large building of "many parlours and chambers" and an extensive garden, as Alexander Graydon wrote "...laid out in the old fashioned style of uniformity, with walks and allies nodding to their brothers, and decorated with a number of evergreens carefully clipped into pyramidal and conical forms." Joseph Pemberton grew up surrounded by the amenities of this in-city estate and the pleasures of a country place called Evergreen near the Schuykill River's lower ferry. Elsewhere close at hand he would have observed the seemingly haphazard pattern of urban development which united fine houses along Chestnut Street with modest or poor dwellings, manufactories, and worse. In the middle of the block were a "row of dingy two story houses" and a set of whalebones at the corner of an alley. On one side of this same block were a Quaker meeting and school while on the opposite side were what Graydon described as "...a filthy uncovered sewer, bordered on either side by shabby stables and tanyards." Some years before Joseph Pemberton decided to build his own house down the street from his father's, the city filled in Dock Creek as it was called, surfaced it, and renamed it Dock Street.

With the death of James and Joseph Pemberton, Jr. in 1809, as the press then noted "...this ancient Family is now nearly extinct, in the male line: but the name Pemberton will ever by intermingled with the peaceful recollections of the golden age of Pennsylvania."³

A Quaker Merchant

Israel's son Joseph was born in 1745. He first comes to notice at the age of twenty, through a piece in the October 10, 1765 issue of the Pennsylvania Gazette:

Joseph Pemberton hereby informs the Public that he has opened an evening School, between Second and Third Streets, for the teaching the Vulgar and Decimal Arithmetick, Surveying, Navigation, and the Use of Globes, on which each Case in Navigation may be demonstrated, and made easy and familiar to the weakest Capacity.

Whether this signified an intent to devote himself to teaching or rather an interest in public service cannot be established from the slender evidence at hand. Nor do we know how the venture turned out. His continued scholarly bent is indicated a decade later by his purchase of Jacob's Law Dictionary and volume on Conveyancing, Philip Miller's Gardener's Dictionary, and the first volume of Blackstone's Commentaries.

He belonged to the Library Company. By 1768 advertisements for the sale of hemp place him in trade at a store on the north side of Race Street, three doors from the corner of Third Street. Tax records on personality for 1769 and 1774 list his occupation as "merchant." By 1775 he was a wine merchant, specializing in Madeira, with a store (perhaps storehouse) on Pine Street and one on Water Street below Chestnut where he also stocked such items in trade as Muscovado sugar, coffee, cotton, pimento, cocoa, and Jamaica hides.

Before becoming a fixture on the Philadelphia mercantile scene, Pemberton married Ann Galloway of Maryland. Thayer states that they "lived extravagantly among the worldly planter class," indulged by a father who smiled on the marriage. After coming to Philadelphia they apparently still had large holdings in Maryland as a listing of stock on the West River plantation (numbering 6 horses, 32 cows, 27 cattle, 26 sheep, 7 breeding sows, and 26 shoats valued at over £200) shows. ¹⁰

Philadelphia tax records list them as having two servants in 1769 and they added one by indenture on April 22, 1773. ¹¹

A reassessment of the character of Joseph Pemberton is long overdue. According to Thayer, whose focus on the father, the subject of his biography, limits his treatment of Joseph Pemberton to a scant two paragraphs on as many pages, the son was a profligate: "In spite of all the fatherly advice that Israel poured upon Joseph, the son failed to conform to his father's philosophy of life—in fact he was both worldly and spoiled."¹² Joseph's later misfortunes have until now appeared ample justification for this verdict. Yet other evidences of his activities and status in the community, brought to light recently, raise a reasonable doubt whether justice has been done him. Misunderstanding of the Pemberton manuscripts may after all be at the root of previous harsh judgments.

Not only did Joseph Pemberton interest himself in certain of the same causes favored by his father, but he appears to have exceeded Israel in others. Among his philanthropies was the Pennsylvania Hospital, to which he contributed £30 in 1771, £11, 10 shillings, 2 pence through bills of credit in 1773.¹³ He served in 1775 as one of the Managers of the Almshouse and House of Employment and Overseers of the Poor of Philadelphia, striving to make the almshouse "perhaps the finest Hospital on the Continent." He contributed funds towards raising purchase money enough to manumit slaves. It is in this last field of humanitarian interest that Joseph attracts the most attention. On June 28, 1775 he set free the slaves acquired through his union with Ann, the six of age on the spot and five underage ones effective upon their attaining twenty-one. Thayer believed this act to have anticipated impending trouble, allowing that this "was done, it seems, to prevent the Negroes being sold, for in less than three weeks after the manumission Joseph was bankrupt."

Joseph Pemberton did indeed go bankrupt, but not for another six months. Following this body blow, he all but disappears from public view. His was the lion's share of Israel's estate upon his decease. He was drafted twice during the Revolutionary War, but paid his way out both times. Later he suffered ill health. His last years he appears to have lived quietly, in comfortable circumstance with no particular standing in the community until his death while still relatively a young man, in 1784.

Joseph Pemberton Builds a House

The Carpenters' Company had first put the lot on the market in 1770, advertising in the Pennsylvania Gazette for February 15 a "commodious lot of ground," to be sold on ground rent. The derivation of this property is set forth in Appendix A, which presents the chain of title. By the terms of their agreement with Pemberton the company received from him a yearly rent of 69-1/3 Spanish milled pieces of eight. Apparently Pemberton lost little time in getting construction underway. The deed is dated January 16, 1775. By February 25 the wood merchants Clark and Wetherill had sold him the first cedar boards, followed by pine boards, oak scaffolding on March 27, indicating that the house was rising, and oak lath on August 24, indicating that plastering was underway (see Appendix F). The last entry on this account is dated November 14, 1775, immediately before Pemberton's bankruptcy. William Ayres supplied the bricks. Beyond the accounts of these two firms no evidence of the work done has been located, and knowledge of the building rests on descriptions and insurance surveys of a later date.

When offered for sale following Pemberton's surrender of the property to his creditors, it was described as a "...large, elegant and commodious new brick house,...in which Joseph Pemberton now lives." The insurance survey supports this general description, filling in details as it proceeds (Appendix B). Pemberton had built a three-story house the full 26 foot width of the lot and 42 feet deep in the main structure, with two large rooms and a long passage along one side leading to the 19 by 11 foot stairway addition in the rear. An extensive range of back buildings completed the set. The two-story kitchen wing 32 by 16 feet, two rooms to the floor, and a one-story wash house and necessary extended into the 140 foot lot in the conventional Philadelphia in-row manner, bringing the overall length to 117 feet. Every line of the survey hints at the fine quality of the building--wainscot panelling, tabernacle frames over the fireplaces in the principal rooms, double cornices, dentils, the Doric order of architecture in hallway features, dowelled floors, and mahogany handrails. The exterior was good of substance rather than showy, with a "good plain frontispiece to door," but modillion brackets in the front cornice. Window panes were 9 by 11 inches. The survey is mute on such details as bonding, dormers (thus indicating clearly that there were none), location of doors, treatment of the side wall facing the alleyway, and disposition of the rear wing. This was a house of a type not-infrequently seen even today. While no contemporary drawings of it have survived, comparative studies of the others will fill in many details.

In making the insurance in three policies covering three sections of the structure, the Contributionship added the location of the chimneys to our knowledge of the house. As stated in the survey (Appendix B) the first policy was "on the front part of House divided by the stack of chimneys." In most particulars the survey agrees with the rough drawing of the house executed by Charles A. Poulson in 1850 four years after it had disappeared from the Philadelphia scene and this drawing must be studied with care (Illustration No. 9). A later writer noted that the Joseph Pemberton House had been "a fine old-fashioned three storied brick dwelling which receded slightly from the line of the street [property line]." In this respect, too, the Poulson view showing the house in such a relationship to the neighboring structure should be taken very seriously. This is corroborated by the legend on the street survey (Illustration No. 3) placing the corner property on the street line.
Having a family of eight children, Joseph and Ann Pemberton had need for all the room the mansion offered.\textsuperscript{25} They moved in sometime during 1775, and remained there after he lost the house apparently until its resale to William Sykes in 1777.\textsuperscript{26}

For a period extending from the first day of 1774 until Pemberton's bankruptcy in November 1775, the highly regarded Philadelphia cabinetmaker, William Savery, executed a great many orders for him. His account, reproduced here in Appendix G, contains a number of entries referring to the moving of furniture to the "New House," one as early as September 12, 1774, a time when other records indicate no house existed. Later entries "To fixing ye lanthorn in the Entry" (February 20, 1775), "To Cash paid for Mending a Door Lock" (July 12, 1775), "To Making and fixing a Blind in the Kitchen" (May 19, 1775) are perhaps also applicable to the house.

The House Next Door

In planning a building to occupy the full width of the lot acquired from the Carpenters' Company, Pemberton took fully into account the situation on the side away from the court. Here was located a two-story brick house on a 17 foot lot, 91 feet deep. In an earlier transaction (September 15, 1773) he had bought this property from Mordecai Lewis. It had been owned by Lewis' mother-in-law Hannah Breintnall at her death in 1770 and the house had been insured by her estate (Appendix C). This house is the one shown by Charles A. Poulson next door to the Joseph Pemberton House, jutting out several feet (Illustration No. 9), and was one of those Graydon found so distasteful as a youth. In acquiring it Pemberton gained the privilege of a four-foot alleyway leading into Hudson's Alley from the rear of the other lot (Illustration No. 3). The yard area of his house thus became accessible from the east. The smaller house changed little through the years as it passed from hand to hand as a parcel with the Pemberton House. It remained a residence tenanted by a long line of renters until the commercial value of its site dictated its removal.

Bankrupt

The lot of insolvent debtors, as bankrupts were referred to in the statutes of the eighteenth century, tended to be much harder than in this era of general laws of bankruptcy and the limited liability of corporate status. In the simpler economy of that century, the man in trade assumed a responsibility scarcely comprehensible to us today, and his folly in extending himself to the point of insolvency was neither forgiven nor forgotten.

Nevertheless, the debtors' apartment in the old Walnut Street Prison was regularly cleaned out through the operation of a law which stripped the offender of all holdings in favor of his creditors (Appendix E). It led to a hearing in the common pleas court with the bankrupt assigning to two or more of his principal creditors everything, for liquidation and division among their fellows.

On November 28, 1775 it came Joseph Pemberton's turn to appear before the bench of common pleas. It had been some time in coming.
According to Thayer, his father had made "great sacrifices" to capitalize his business; he had shown his gratitude by being "reckless and neglectful," and of late "had fallen to gambling for large stakes." The substance of these charges is difficult to find, apparently drawn from Israel's admission when the heat was on that Joseph's conduct had been "imprudent." Earlier advice on financing shipments, being prompt, and seeking "the Kingdom of God and his righteousness" may have been paternal concern over an erring son or merely the sentiments of a deeply religious man.

Looking slightly afield, one's attention is engaged by the work of the Congress that had been virtually in Joseph's backyard a few months before. Among their most effective measures was a resolution of October 6, 1774 declaring against the importation of the very staples of Joseph Pemberton's trade--coffee, syrups, and pimento from the British islands; wines from Madeira. On October 18 the Congress put teeth into their resolution by forming an association to see to its enforcement. The effective date was December 1, 1774. Locally, a Philadelphia committee of Sixty-six was formed, which in a thoroughly systematic way divided the city into six districts and arranged for morning inspection of all lately arrived vessels. Instances arose of vessels being turned away without unloading when they were found to have prohibited cargo. By 1775 the decline in trade from England reached ninety-seven per cent.

Philadelphia's Quaker merchants opposed the non-importation agreements, certainly Joseph Pemberton among them. Whether he found his large stock unconvertible or tried to monopolize trade, he apparently lost out through the pressures of the times. And his losses were very heavy. He was not alone. Richard Bache, Franklin's son-in-law, encountered the same difficulties and went out of business at the same time.

Before Joseph Pemberton completed the course he had been wrung out completely. By November 20, 1775 Israel Pemberton had stepped in to guarantee the creditors:

Respected Friends

The knowledge I now have of my Son's imprudent Conduct & the unhappy Circumstances he is thereby involv'd in, was a few days since as unexpected to me as to any of you - it gives me greater anxiety & pain of mind than I can express - and as I am desirous of preventing your being loser by him, I am willing to assign you to the full amount of Ten thousand pounds in mony [sic] bonds & real Estate, towards making up what his Estate may fall Short of paying you, on this Condition, that all the Creditors do assize to demand no more than the Sums of Current mony [sic] they advanc'd to him, with Lawful interest, but if those who have had bills of Exchf from him insist on more, I do not intend to contribute the said Sum or any part of it towards satisfying them, but to distribute it in Such manner, as I may hereafter conclude to be more just & equal. With respect I am your afflicted Friend

Philadelphia 20th: 11 mo: 1775

I. P. 30

Assignment of the house among other possessions was made in a hearing eight days later (Appendix A, pp. 4-5). A meeting of the creditors at the George Tavern followed on December 5, 1775. Creditors were advertised in the newspapers. The dismal story of the sale of his household possessions, collections from those who owed monies to him fills page after page in the 28th and 29th volumes of the Pemberton Papers at the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. The inventories made of the house's furnishings have been reproduced here as Appendix D, for whatever light they may throw on the appearance of the house. There Joseph Pemberton's connection ended. The assignees finally sold the house to William Sykes, another merchant, on March 12, 1777, and the process began all over again (Appendix A, pages 5-6).

The House in William Sykes' Ownership

What is known about William Sykes requires little space for the telling. He cut no great figure among the Philadelphia merchants. Nevertheless, he held forth in one of the city's better houses for thirteen long years, using the premises for his business until he followed Pemberton into bankruptcy in 1790. On April 10 of that year the house was sold by the sheriff at auction. So far as is known Sykes made little change in the premises. The prominent Philadelphia lawyer, Edward Tilghman, bought the house (Appendix A, p. 6).

Attorney Edward Tilghman

Edward Tilghman was by all odds the historically most important of the owners of Pemberton's house. A Marylander of an illustrious family, he was educated in Philadelphia schools and admitted to the bar in the April term 1774, after spending the two previous years at the Middle Temple, London studying. After a brief fling with the army during the early stages of the Revolution he returned to Philadelphia to resume practice of the law.

Tilghman very quickly became one of the luminaries of the Pennsylvania courts. Horace Binney credited him with possessing "the most accurate legal judgment of any man of his day." He was an "advocate of surpassing powers."

It was apparently during Tilghman's period of ownership that a woodshed 13 by 24 feet was added somewhere on the lot, probably the rear, where in 1809 the Carpenters' Company appointed a committee to have the party wall between Tilghman and their store valued. 34

The last years of Tilghman's life were darkened by ill-health and financial reverses. He put the house up for sale in January 1810, and sold it the following March 27 to David Kennedy, a gilder. 35

The House and Later Occupants

With the coming of Kennedy, the Pemberton House entered its last, and least distinguished period, one of hard use as a place of business, post office, and hotel. The stout, old building withstood it all with a grace which did credit to its beginnings. Kennedy, in 1812 raised the old back building from two to three stories and added a three-story addition 16 by 17 feet (Appendix B). By 1815 he had put it on the market, and on February 7, 1816 Richard Bache, grandson of Benjamin Franklin, bought it. 36 He kept the post office there. On August 23, 1823 he sold it to Zachariah Poulson. 37 An alteration of some interest for its implication for the disposition of the back buildings took place under Poulson when he installed a cellar door on the alley side, only to be forced by the Carpenters' Company to remove it. 38
Finally, Poulson's heirs sold the house after it had been leased as The National Hotel, Tremont House, and Herr's Hotel to the Howell brothers, paper hangings manufacturers. Casper Souder, Jr. credits them with demolishing it and building the five-story building in its stead (Appendix G).

RECORD OF INSURANCE ON THE JOSEPH PEMBERTON HOUSE

So far as is known Joseph Pemberton never insured his house. After he failed in business his assignees, in whose names title now resided, applied for a policy. Their application was taken up at the board meeting of the Philadelphia Contributionship for the Insuring of Houses from Loss by Fire, then Philadelphia's only fire insurance company, during the meeting held at the George tavern on November 5, 1776. The survey they considered, as entered in the company's Survey Book No. 1 (1768-1794) pages 80-81, reads as follows:

Surveyed 4th Novem. 1776.

on the front part of House divi:) £ 500 @ 30/ p cent on the Back part & Stair case £ 500 @ 30/on the Backbuildings £ 250 @ 20/

The directors signed policies dated January 27, 1777 and numbered 1971, 1972, and 1973 covering respectively the front part of the house, the back part and stairway, and the backbuildings during the February 4, 1777 meeting. On January 27, 1777 the Contributionship received payments totalling £17 10 shillings "Deposite Money" on the three policies, paid by Reynell and the other assignees, according to the company's Journal B, page 223 and Ledger B, page 496. The following August 5, after sale of the property, the new owner, William Sykes, assumed the charge (respectively pages 229 and 496), as did Edward Tilghman (respectively pages 353 and 500) and David Kennedy (Journal C, page 108 and Ledger B, page 634) on September 7, 1790 and April 10, 1810 as successive owners. Renewals were made at seven-year intervals throughout this period, by Sykes on February 3, 1784 (Board Minutes 1774-1791, page 232) and Tilghman on February 1, 1791, February 6, 1798, and February 5, 1805 (Board Minutes 1774-1791, page 447; 1791-1804, page 194; 1804-1817, page 7; Numerical Book). When the policies expired on January 27, 1812, at the end of yet another seven-year interval, Kennedy requested a resurvey (Expiration of Policies book 1809-1812). The survey considered by the board during their meeting on February 4, 1812 (Board Minutes, 1804-1817, page 214) reads as follows:

[CONTRIBUTIONSHIP LOOSE SURVEY NO. 1971]

I have Surveyed a back building belonging to David Kennedy, back of his house south Side of Chesnut St east of and near Fourth Street - being an addition of 17 by 16 feet three Stories high, also the old back building raised from 2 to three Stories high the walls 9 in thick - lower Story finished for a Kitchen - plain the 2nd Story finished with base only & Single mouldings to the windows - the 3rd Story divided in two rooms both finished plain - the Glass 8 by 10 inches - lower floor of yellow pine the other two of white pine - Shed roof - plain eve tin gutter & pipe - two flights of Straight Stairs leading from the lower into the 3rd Story - painted inside & out. --

2 Mo 3rd 1812 -- John C. Evans

$4000: at 3½ p Cť
Deduct former Deps[?]

$140

46.67

$ 93.33

The company issued a combined policy under the old Number 1971 on April 6, 1812 for an additional "Deposite" of $93.33 covering the building as altered by Kennedy with the "Liberty" of doing business on the premises as a carver and gilder (Journal C, page 135; Insurance Deposit Book, 1794-1818).

Finally, on April 10, 1810 consistent with the company's new policy of refunding deposit money, Tilghman received back his $46.67 or £17 10 shillings (Ledger B, page 681). The company returned Kennedy his $133.00 on March 26, 1816 (Journal C, page 174; Ledger B, page 681; Register of Policies, 1810-1843). Here the record ends. There are no cancelled policies in the box reserved for them. The company's Street Index of Policies in force, 1845-1895 lists none of the policies by number or later owner. Records of this type are incomplete and for certain periods apparently never existed.
RECORD OF INSURANCE ON THE HOUSE ADJOINING JOSEPH PEMBERTON'S ON CHESTNUT STREET

To a point the record of insurance for the small brick house next door parallels that of the Joseph Pemberton House. An older house, purchased by Joseph Pemberton from Mordecai Lewis in 1773, it had been insured in 1770 along with a similar house adjoining it to the east. As given in company Survey Book No. 1 (page 23) it reads:

Surveyed Decemb' 4th 1770

two houses belonging to the Estate of Hannah Brintnal deceas'd Situate on the South Side of Chestnut Street Between 3d & 4th Streets each being 17 feet front - 38 feet deep - 2 Storys high - 9 inch walls - 2 Rooms on A floor - Board Newel Stairs - Garets plaster'd Roof nearly New - inside very plain and old plaster'd partitions in the westermost and Board partitions in the eastermost house

each kitchen 19 by 11½ feet - 1 Story high - 9 inch walls - old.

house £ 275) £300 on each is £600 - @ 20/kitchen - £ 25) two policies

The house was surveyed again on the same date as the Joseph Pemberton House (November 4, 1776), considered by the board at the same meeting (November 5, 1776), and covered by policy number 1974, the fourth of a numerical sequence, on the same date (January 27, 1777). The survey entered in company Survey Book No. 1 (pages 80-81) reads as follows:

Surveyed 4th November 1776

A House belonging to the estate of Joseph Pemberton
Situated on the south side of Chestnut street adjoining the House belonging to said estate on a corner of the alley leading to Carpenters Hall --

16 feet front 29 deep, 2 stories high, 9 inch walls
2 rooms on a floor, plastered & partitions, very plain garret plastered, shingling about 8 years old The kitchen
17 by 11 feet, 2 Stories high, 9 inch walls --

House £ 200) £250 @ 20 p.
Kitchen £ 50)

"Deposite Money" in the amount of £2 10 shillings sufficed to carry the house, owner by owner, through Sykes, Tilghman, and Kennedy, and tenants

When the other policies expired in 1812 and were so listed, no mention was made of 1974. No return of deposit is listed for a policy of this number. The record thus ends with the renewal of 1805.

Whereas it hath been represented to the assembly of this province that many persons by losses and other misfortunes are rendered incapable of paying their whole debts, and though they are willing to make the utmost satisfaction they can, are nevertheless detained in prison by their creditors:

And whereas such unhappy persons have always been deemed the proper objects of public compassion:

[Section 1.] Be it therefore enacted by the Honorable John Penn, Esquire, Lieutenant-Governor under the Honorable Thomas Penn and Richard Penn, Esquires, true and absolute Proprietaries of the Province of Pennsylvania and counties of Newcastle, Kent and Sussex upon Delaware, by and with the advice and consent of the representatives of the freemen of the said Province in General Assembly met, and by the authority of the same, That the justices of the county court of common pleas for each and every county within this province shall on application to them in writing made by any prisoner or prisoners committed in execution for debt at or before the passing of this act, appoint a certain day and place for holding a special court of common pleas, whereof at least ten days' notice shall be given to his or their respective creditors or their attorneys in fact if such they have within this province, otherwise to their attorney at law, by leaving the same in writing at his, her or their last place of abode, at which time and place the said justices shall by an order or rule of the said court, cause the said prisoners to be brought before them and shall then and there in the presence of the said creditors if they will be present, administer to each of the said prisoners an oath or affirmation according to law to the following effect, to wit:

That the account by him delivered into that honorable court in his petition to the said court doth contain a true and perfect account of all his real and personal estate, debts, credits and effects whatsoever which he or any in trust for him have or at the time of his said petition had, or is or was in any respect entitled to, in possession, remainder or reversion (excepting the wearing apparel and bedding for himself and family, not exceeding ten pounds in value in the whole), and that he has not at any time since his imprisonment or before directly or indirectly sold, leased, assigned or otherwise disposed of or made over in trust for himself or otherwise other than as mentioned in such account any part of his lands, estate, goods, stock, money, debts or other real or personal estate whereby to have or expect any benefit or profit to himself or family or to defraud any of his creditors to whom he is indebted.
And the said prisoner having taken such oath or affirmation in open court, and his creditors failing to discover any effects or estate belonging to such deponent omitted in his said account, shall make assignments to any two or more of the creditors, as the court shall order and direct, in trust for all his said creditors, of all his lands, goods and effects contained in such account by a short indorsement thereon, by which said assignment the estate, interest and property of the lands, goods and effects so assigned shall be vested in the person or persons to whom such assignment shall be made, who may take possession of the same in his or their own name or names, after which no release of the said prisoners or any of them, his or their executors or administrators, shall be valid or effectual in law against the assignees aforesaid, and the said court, in case no fraud shall appear on the part of the said prisoner and they shall think it just and reasonable, shall cause and order the said prisoner so bona fide assigning all his estate and effects to be discharged from his imprisonment aforesaid.

[Section II.] And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said trustees so as aforesaid appointed by the court shall within such time as shall be thought reasonable by the said justices render their accounts to and adjust the same with the said justices, who are hereby authorized and empowered to allow or disallow of all or any part thereof as to them shall appear just; and after such settlement shall distribute the sum and sums of money which shall be in their hands to and among the respective creditors of such insolvent debtors in proportion to their several debts; and in case the said trustees shall neglect or refuse to obey and comply with the orders and directions of the said justices it shall and may be lawful to and for them to proceed against them for the contempt in such manner as is usual in other cases of contempt to the said court.

[Section III.] And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the persons of the said prisoners, or of any of them, after such his or their discharge as aforesaid, shall not at any time hereafter be imprisoned for any debts before the time of his or their discharge contracted.

Provided nevertheless, That the discharge of the said prisoners or any of them by virtue of this act shall not acquit or discharge any other person from such debts, sum or sums of money for which such person now is bound or engaged with the said prisoners or any of them, nor any lands, goods, chattels or other effects which the said prisoners or any of them may hereafter acquire.

[Section IV.] Provided also, and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if the said prisoners or any of them shall upon any indictment for taking a false and corrupt oath or affirmation in any matter or thing contained in the said oath or affirmation be convicted by his or their own confession or by the verdict of twelve men, he or they shall suffer all the pains and penalties which by law may be inflicted on any person convicted of willful and corrupt perjury, and shall likewise be liable to be arrested, taken and imprisoned upon any process \textit{de novo} and charged in execution for the said debt in the same manner as if he or they had never been in execution or discharged before, and shall forever after be barred of any benefit of this act.

Passed February 24, 1770. Confirmed by the King in Council, May 24, 1771. See Appendix XXVII, Section III, and the note to the Act of Assembly passed February 14, 1729-30, Chapter 315.

The progress of our journey up Chesnut [sic] street, upon the south side, has brought us to the large five-storied brick building, No. 320, occupied for several years past as the office of the Philadelphia branch of Adam's Express. The structure which originally occupied this site was a fine old-fashioned three-storied brick dwelling, which receded slightly from the line of the street, and which had a garden in its rear, with outlets upon Hudson's alley and upon Carpenters' court. This old mansion went through the usual vicissitudes of ancient dwellings in this part of the city, having been by turns a dwelling, a store, the Post Office, a hotel, &c. &c. It was finally demolished—we think, by the Howell Brothers—and the present very large building was erected in its stead. The property was numbered 116 under the old system. We trace the following-named tenants who have been upon the site:

1791, and for a number of years after, Edward Tilghman, attorney-at-law.
1816. Samuel Kennedy, looking-glass and picture store.
1836. Tremont House, Zenos Wells, Jr., proprietor.
1843. Herr's Hotel, Daniel Herr, proprietor.
1846. Howell & Brothers, paper hangings.
1846. S. W. Stockton, porcelain teeth, &c.
1858. Adams' Express, A. Winch, agent; William F. Murphy & Son, mercantile stationers; Wm. F. Geddes, printer; and Jared Craig, printer, occupy the upper portion of the building. The upper floors of the structure have had numerous tenants since the improvement of the property; they are too numerous to name in detail.

Richard Bache, who was Postmaster upon this spot forty years ago, was a grandson of Benjamin Franklin, having descended from Franklin's daughter Sarah who married Richard Bache the elder in 1767. Mr. Bache the younger was an active Democrat of the Jackson school, and his Franklin Gazette was devoted to the political service of the Hero of New Orleans, after having used its influence to secure the nomination of Mr. John C. Calhoun to the Presidency. The principal political newspapers in the city, at that time, were Stephen Simpson's Columbian Observer, Poulson's American Daily Advertiser, Duane's Aurora, and Binn's Democratic Press. These papers kept up a hard fight upon the Federal and Democratic sides, the battle being triangleized, occasionally, by the dissensions of the Democratic organs over the spoils. It was said by the opponents of Mr. Bache's paper that it was controlled by the "Family" consisting of Mr. Bache himself, George M. Dallas, Thomas Sergeant, Trevanion B. Dallas, and Williams Wilkins, of Pittsburg. All these gentlemen were connected by blood or marriage, and they generally managed to work together most harmoniously in the prosecution of their political scheme.

Survey of properties on Hudson's Alley (Whalebone Alley) and Chestnut Street made July 17, 1783 shows property at 116 Chestnut Street when in ownership of William Sykes. Legend establishes alleyway (shown partially dotted in) leading from rear of lot to Whalebone Alley 91 feet from the property line on Chestnut Street. This would have precluded the back buildings having been on the east side of the lot. Courtesy 3rd Survey District, Department of Public Works, Philadelphia.
Site of the Joseph Pemberton House in relation to other plot features as shown on 1786 copy of earlier John Lukens survey, "A Plan with the Measures of all the Squares...between Walnut & Chestnut Streets." Branches of Dock Creek, by then an arched underground sewer, angled across the block. Tanyards, stables, and a soap manufactory lined the block's interior alleys. Enlargement from engraving known as the Davies map of 1794 shows first graphic representation of Joseph Pemberton House. Here it appears grouped with the smaller houses at 312 and 314 Chestnut Street, its features undistinguishable from theirs. Carpenters' Hall below, the Fourth Street Meeting and School (23) to left, and Friends Alms House (12) at bottom were nearby landmarks in the Philadelphia of that day. Courtesy Library of Congress.
Survey drawn in 1796 shows Pemberton's lot and neighboring properties during Edward Tilghman's period of ownership. The 17-foot square plot bearing the initials "E.T." was never owned by Tilghman although apparently in 1796 had been opened along the east-west alleyway for some unexplained purpose. Next known plan to represent the Joseph Pemberton House, all but devoid of recognizable features, at right above Carpenters' Hall (32). Detail from John Hills' "...Plan of the City of Philadelphia," engraved in Middlesex (near London) and published in Philadelphia, 1796. Other numbered buildings are Fourth Street Friends Meeting and School (17), Bank of the United States (35), and Bank of North America (36). Courtesy Library of Congress.
Years later—as the Joseph Pemberton House appears on William Allen's 1828 engraving "Plan of the City of Philadelphia and Adjoining Districts" (much enlarged). House is under feature number "289" and again assumes featureless form. Apparent wing to right is, in fact, the smaller house at 314 Chestnut Street. Numeral "289" in legend designates building as National Hotel. Oversized numeral "12" is map designation for Philadelphia's Chestnut Ward. Other nearby numbered buildings and features of interest are Carpenters' Hall (55), the Bank of the United States (169), Carpenters' Court (54), Hudson Alley (199), and Friends Academy (143).

Important drawing of Joseph Pemberton House and associated properties dated 1860 or fourteen years after demolition or remodelling of the house in 1846. Artist was Charles A. Poulson, son of former owner Zachariah Poulson. Poulson and his father for years had sketched the old Philadelphia scene and it is possible this drawing has antecedent materials behind it. Such features as the doorway, shutters, lintels, and cellar door are crudely drawn but of vital interest to the proposed reconstruction. Reproduction photograph is from original in J. F. Sachse's Pictures of Old Philadelphia. Courtesy Library Company of Philadelphia.
Print of around 1838 shows profile of facade features of building on Joseph Pemberton House site at extreme right. Columns and molding across front appear in no later views. Shutter has same appearance as that in Illustration No. 15. Beyond down spout is feature looking suspiciously like a frontispiece—pediment and column (half-hidden by box-like shoes of down spout) with step below to left of facade. Photograph from Independence National Historical Park files.
Detail from lithograph by E. Whitefield published around 1850 looking east from Independence Hall shows gable roof of Pemberton House as it was before 1846. Chimneys as depicted are at variance with insurance survey's "stack of chimneys." At right, cupola of Carpenters' Hall. Courtesy Library Company of Philadelphia.

Carpenters' Court in 1859-1861. Five-story building at left replaced the Pemberton House through the process of rebuilding or replacement by Howells. Note lintel design of type popular earlier in the century. Courtesy Free Library of Philadelphia.
Carpenters' Court following city-county consolidation, from Hexamer-Locher map of 1860. Change in street numbering system accompanied governmental developments, making the Pemberton House site by "new numbering" 320. Photograph from Independence National Historical Park files.
When insured in 1776 by Joseph Pemberton's assignees, the house received a fire mark like numbers 7 or 8 above (issued in 1774 and later) and bearing the number 1971. A fire mark of this character should be affixed to the reconstructed building. Photograph reproduced from plate in Alwin E. Bulau's Footprints of Assurance (New York, 1953), p. 26.
