ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

History, Incorporated would like to extend a special thanks to the City of Albany, Planning and Development, in particular Rozanne Braswell, for providing an exceptional work environment, endless assistance, and wonderful lodging arrangements. Rozanne's passion for the continued preservation of Albany's rich heritage is boundless, and we are very grateful for having the opportunity to work with her and the Planning & Development staff on this project. Finally, thank you to all of those residents who showed an interest in the survey and participated in providing historic photographs and helpful information pertaining to the neighborhood.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This historic resources report was conducted as part of an effort to identify and survey all properties 40 years or older located within the Rawson Circle/Park Neighborhoods in Albany, Dougherty County, Georgia. The primary objectives of the intensive-level survey included the documentation and creation of an inventory of historic resources, the evaluation of potential National Register of Historic Places designations (individual resources and historic districts), and the evaluation of the survey area for inclusion into the existing locally designated Albany Historic District.

The historic resources, designed landscapes, and majestic oak-lined streetscapes within the project area are reminiscent of Albany's unprecedented period of suburban growth, and its efforts to promote the beautification of the city; and are characteristic of evolving ideals in residential development and planning throughout the early to mid-20th century.

The pre-defined survey area includes a total of 844 parcels and two parks not located within a defined tax parcel. The survey area is comprised of six historic residential subdivisions including Arcadia, Hilsman Heights, Rawson Circle, Rawson Park, Palmyra Heights, and Cleveland Heights. Collectively, the entire survey area is locally referred to as "Rawson Circle/Park." A total of 818 resources, including buildings, parks, and designed landscapes, were identified during the course of this survey project. Twenty-eight (28) parcels are vacant lots that were either once occupied by a non-extant building, or have remained undeveloped land contributing to the overall picturesque setting of the neighborhood. Appendix A includes a list of a total of 844 parcels (occupied and vacant) and resources within the survey area for a total of 846 line items. Two resources are currently listed in the National Register of Historic Places ("National Register"): Tift Park, and a Lustron home at 711 9th Avenue.

A total of 800 resources were documented and 795 were assigned a Georgia's Natural, Archaeological, and Historic Resources Geographic Information System ("GNAHRGIS") number.[1] Resources that were previously surveyed were updated in GNAHRGIS. Resources less than 40 years old were not entered into GNAHRGIS.

As a result of the intensive-level survey, it is recommended that the locally designated Albany Historic District be expanded to include the entire survey area, with the exception of a few resources located along its western boundary.

It is further recommended that priorities for National Register listing include the earliest phases of Rawson Circle and Rawson Park, as well as Palmyra Heights (Subdivision A). A number of impressive, two-story Mid-Century apartment buildings are located within the survey area. Further examination of the City's mid-century apartment buildings, within the survey area and beyond, should be considered in order to develop a historic context, and a potential Multiple Property Documentation Form for National Register evaluation.

[1] The discrepancy in surveyed properties and number of corresponding GNAHRGIS ID numbers is due to a few resources being documented under the same GNAHRGIS ID as that of another resource of which it is directly associated with (ex. Two apartment buildings on adjacent parcels that are part of a larger complex, or development).

A number of resources determined to be individually eligible for the National Register based solely on exterior observations were identified and are listed in Chapter V. It is recommended that additional research and interior observations of each potentially eligible resource be conducted to formally determine its National Register eligibility.

I. PROJECT DESCRIPTION

This historic resource report is the result of an intensive-level survey in the City of Albany, Dougherty County, Georgia, and conducted as part of an effort to identify and document resources located within what is locally referred to as Rawson Circle/Park. This publication has been financed in part by funds from the National Park Service, U.S. Department of the Interior, through the Historic Preservation Division of the Georgia Department of Natural Resources and sponsored by the City of Albany. This publication is compliant with all applicable Federal and State laws, rules, and regulations.

The documentation of historic resources plays an important role in community planning and the continued preservation of the architectural heritage of Albany. In order to generate a comprehensive inventory of historic resources, the 2014-2015 survey project included a number of objectives:

1) to identify, record, and photograph all resources forty (40) years old or older within the survey boundaries.
2) to identify and evaluate individual properties and districts within the survey area that, on the basis of age and integrity, meet the eligibility criteria for listing in the National Register of Historic Places ("National Register").
3) to identify each property within the survey area (both historic and non-historic) as potentially contributing or non-contributing to the locally designated Albany Historic District; and, based on these results, determine whether the survey area, or portions of the survey area, warrant inclusion within an expanded locally designated historic district.

The analysis and evaluation of information obtained during the survey will contribute not only to Albany's impressive inventory of historic resources, but will benefit future planning and management projects for the preservation of the City's unique historic sense of place.

The pre-defined survey area is comprised of six historic residential neighborhoods collectively referred to as "Rawson Circle/Park."[2] The survey area consists of a total of 844 parcels of land, two small parks lacking an assigned tax parcel, and 28 vacant lots. A total of 818 resources, both historic and non-historic are located within the survey area. Of that, 800 were documented, and 795 entered into GNAHRGIS.

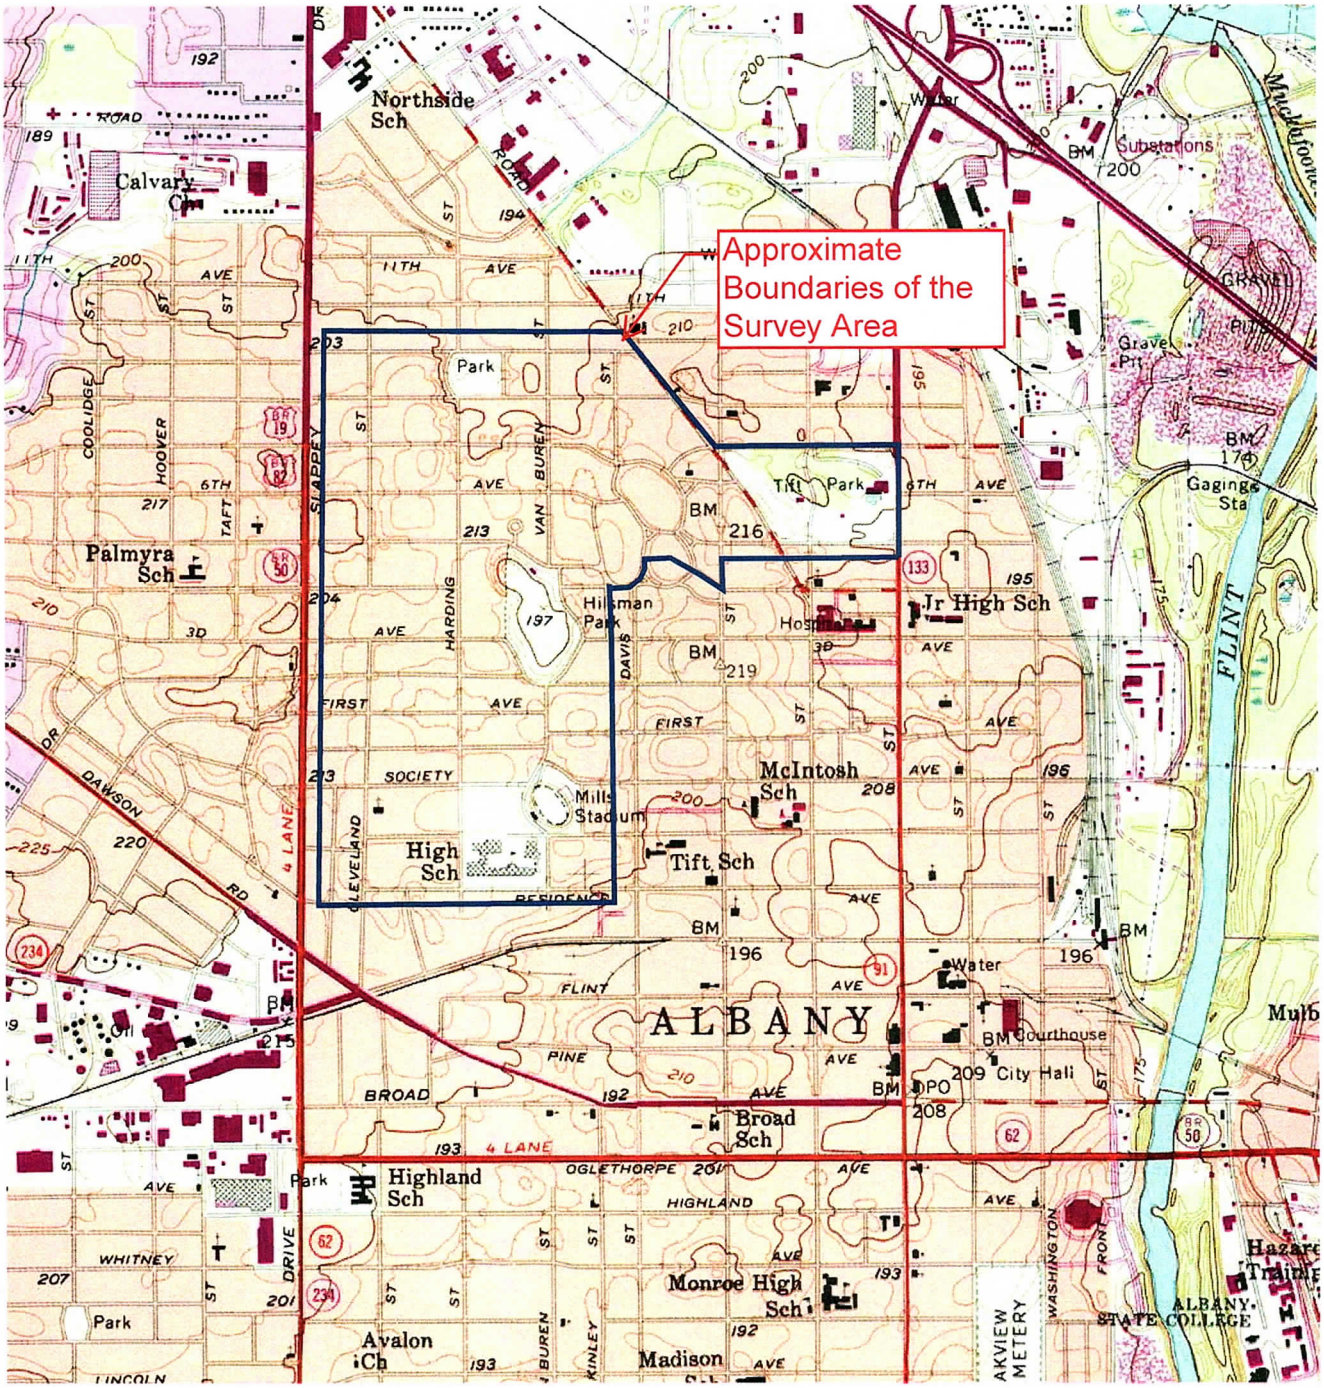

The survey area is bounded on the north by the rear property lines of parcels located on the north side of 9th Avenue, on the south by the rear property lines of parcels fronting the south side of Residence Avenue; on the east by Palmyra Road, N. Jefferson Street, and the existing local historic district along McKinley Street; and the west property lines of parcels near N. Slappey Boulevard. Parcels fronting N. Slappey Boulevard were excluded from the survey area as this road is commercially developed and resources along Slappey are generally heavily altered. Figures 1 and 2 identify the approximate boundaries of the survey area. Figure 3 shows the boundary of the existing local historic district as well as the survey area (proposed local historic district expansion area).

The intensive-level field survey was conducted by History, Incorporated in September of 2014. Secretary of Interior qualified Architectural Historians, Jaime L. Destefano and Michelle K. Taylor conducted all phases of this project. High-quality digital photographs of each resource were taken during the field survey. For each surveyed resource, History, Incorporated entered data and uploaded a minimum of two photographs into Georgia's NAHRGIS online database. Lindsay Crockett with History, Incorporated assisted in the data entry. A large-scale map of the survey area (1"=200') supplements this report and includes parcels and addresses. The map is on file with the Georgia Historic Preservation Division (HPD). Appendix A lists each address, parcel, or resources and its assigned GNAHRGIS number, if applicable.

The result of this project is the completion of data entry of the 800 surveyed resources in GNAHRGIS (total of 795 NAHRGIS IDs), the 1"=200' survey map, a local district expansion evaluation report (on file with the City of Albany), and this cultural resource report. An online platform, RuskinArc, was utilized throughout the course of the survey project to assist in the creation of the inventory, analysis of survey data, and to provide an opportunity for the public to stay abreast of the survey progress. A detailed inventory of all surveyed resources is also a product of this project and provided in Appendix A. The inventory was generated utilizing RuskinArc. A hard copy of the above documentation, as well as a digital copy on CD, are on file with HPD.

II. PREVIOUS PRESERVATION PROJECTS ASSOCIATED WITH THE SURVEY AREA

Prior historic resources survey projects have been conducted for portions of the survey area. The first known project was completed in 1983 by Surveyor, Sandra Dixon. The project was developed by Thronateeska Heritage Foundation and the Albany, Georgia and Southwest Georgia Area Planning and Development Commission.[3] Only "older" properties were surveyed as part of the 1983 survey project. Distinct neighborhoods within the present survey area that were documented in 1983 include Palmyra Heights, Hilsman Heights, Cleveland Heights, Rawson Circle and Rawson Park, and Arcadia. The latter includes the National Register-listed Tift Park, Albany's oldest municipal park. A later survey of portions of the present survey area was completed in 1997 by University of Georgia, Masters of Historic Preservation students. The survey included the documentation of all properties 50 years old or older. Individual survey forms from the 1997 project were imported into the GNAHRGIS database, and data fields entered for each surveyed resource. As such, the 1997 survey data was available via GNAHRGIS. All of the previously surveyed resources entered into GNAHRGIS were misplotted and were corrected as part of this project.

In 1996, the locally designated Albany Historic District was established, and design guidelines put in place in 2000 to ensure the continued preservation of its historic resources. The historic district is adjacent to the survey area to the south and east as shown in Figure 3. The locally designated historic district encompasses portions of the following historic neighborhoods that are also included within the present survey area: Rawson Circle, Hilsman Heights, and Arcadia.[4] In 2006, the Albany Historic District was resurveyed as part of an undertaking requiring Section 106 consultation.

The City of Albany boasts eight (8) Lustron homes, of which six (6) are located within the survey area. Two of the Lustron homes, 1001 and 1005 2nd Avenue were formally determined eligible for the National Register in 1996, and 711 9th Avenue is currently listed in the National Register. Tift Park (NPS #19931115) was listed in 1993 and is associated with the historic Arcadia neighborhood, also known as North Albany. Tift Park is located on the east edge of the survey area, east of Palmyra Road. There are no other National Register-listed properties located within the survey area.

III. SURVEY METHODOLOGY

Prior to the field survey, mapping was prepared and provided to History, Incorporated by the City of Albany to assist in the development of an appropriate strategy for conducting the field survey. History, Incorporated participated in a public meeting, arranged by the City, to notify the public of the project goals and to answer questions. The kick-off meeting was held on Wednesday, September 10, 2014. History, Incorporated completed the Rawson Circle/Park Historic Resources Survey in conformance with the procedures for intensive-level survey outlined in National Register Bulletin 24: Guidelines for Local Survey: A Basis for Preservation Planning. Compliance with the National Register Bulletin 15: How to Apply the National Register Criteria for Evaluation was also adhered to.

BACKGROUND RESEARCH REVIEW

Historical research is critical in understanding and interpreting the developmental history of the Rawson Circle/Park neighborhoods. Research occurred prior to, and concurrent with the field survey. In doing so, the Project team not only gained a broader understanding of the project area, but was able to incorporate the field and research data in order to develop a historic context, establish dates of construction, and interpret trends in development.

Research pertaining to previous survey efforts, National Register listings, and local historic district designations within the project area, was conducted at the City of Albany Planning & Development Department, the Thronateeska Heritage Center, and through a review of GNAHRGIS and the National Register database.

Considerable primary and secondary resources were reviewed which provided a wealth of background information contributing to the establishment of a historic context of the project area and its development. Research on the historical development of the Rawson Circle/Park neighborhoods was conducted both locally and online by History, Incorporated. Georgia's NAHRGIS and various other online tools provided historical photographs, tax assessment records, city directories, building permits, and general local histories. Local repositories visited by History, Incorporated included the Dougherty County Public Library Genealogy Department, the Dougherty County Clerk of Court property records, and the Thronateeska Heritage Center. Sanborn Fire Insurance Maps were not available for the project area.

A review of historic plat maps, previous survey data, and current tax assessor records reveal that the survey area is comprised of numerous historic subdivisions and/or additions dating from the early- to mid-20th century. These subdivisions include portions of Arcadia, Cleveland Heights, Hilsman Heights, and Rawson Circle, and the entirety of Rawson Park and Palmyra Heights Subdivisions A & B. The design and layout of the various subdivisions not only reflect trends in urban residential planning during the first half of the 20th century, but also demonstrate the rapid expansion of the City of Albany during this period. The development of each neighborhood comprising the survey area, and associated maps, are provided in Chapter III.

FIELD SURVEY

History, Incorporated conducted an intensive-level field survey in September of 2014 utilizing current tax assessor maps provided by the City, previously documented survey forms of each resource (if available), and equipped with a broader understanding of the unique developmental history of the project area. With early plat maps of each of the historic subdivisions, the Project Team was able to more precisely identify character-defining elements of each addition such as layout and design, and patterns in architectural type and style. The survey was inventoried street by street beginning on the east with Tift Park and moving west then south. Per recommendations of the City, 8th and 9th Avenues were surveyed last. Unless visibility was limited, a minimum of three, high-quality digital photographs were made of each resource (historic and non-historic). Architectural descriptions of prior survey phases were cross-checked during the field survey. Any changes or alterations since the prior survey were noted in the field.

Individual resources were assessed in the field for individual National Register eligibility, and contributing vs. non-contributing status was projected for a potential local historic district expansion. In addition, utilizing the various neighborhood plat maps, the Project Team conducted a windshield survey to determine the boundaries of potential National Register eligible historic districts. Individual resources within potential eligible historic districts were then assessed for their contributing vs. non-contributing status. Chapter V includes a discussion on the various requirements and/or criteria adhered to in determining National Register eligibility, and the contributing/non-contributing status for the local historic district expansion.

SURVEY DOCUMENTATION

Upon completion of the field survey, and during the months of October 2014 through April 2015, field data for each resource 40 years old or older was entered into GNAHRGIS. Those resources that were previously surveyed were updated in GNAHRGIS. Notable subsidiary buildings, such as carriage houses or barns, were recorded individually in GNAHRGIS. A minimum of two photographs were uploaded in GNAHRGIS for each resource.

As data was entered into GNAHRGIS, each resource was also entered into RuskinArc. Information entered into GNAHRGIS include address, GIS location, resource type, architectural style, historic and current uses, and assessment of National Register eligibility, among others. The associated GNAHRGIS number was also input into RuskinArc. Mapping and report generation provided by RuskinArc assisted substantially in analyzing data and creating an inventory of resources within the survey area.

A detailed inventory was generated utilizing RuskinArc for all parcels presently located within the survey area. The inventory, provided in Appendix A, includes the following information: associated GNAHRGIS number (if assigned), address, street, tax parcel number, determination of contributing/non-contributing status for a potentially eligible National Register historic district, name of associated potentially eligible historic district, current function and subcategory if applicable, date of construction, stories, architectural form, and architectural style.

Finally, a map of the survey area identifying the boundaries of each parcel within the survey area and addresses was prepared. The survey map, scaled at 1"=200', supplements this document.

Chapters II-IV and the appendices include a general historical background of the survey area, architectural survey results, and a detailed assessment of historic resources located within the survey area. An evaluation of the survey area for inclusion in the existing local Albany Historic District is provided in Chapter V, as well as recommendations for National Register listing, individual and/or historic districts.

III. HISTORICAL OVERVIEW

Created by an act of the Georgia state legislature on December 15, 1853, Dougherty County was formed from portions of Baker County, which was established earlier in 1825. At the time of its formation, Dougherty County was famed for its high production of cotton, corn, sugar cane, rice and tobacco, and its count seat of Albany was the center of trade throughout the region.[5] The county occupies land ceded from the Creek Nation in 1825. By 1834, nearly the entirety of the Creek Nation was forcibly removed and an influx of settlers moved westward into Georgia, including the region which would become Dougherty County.[6]

Located in southwest Georgia, Dougherty County is bounded by Terrell and Lee Counties to the north, Worth County to the east, Mitchell and Baker Counties to the south, and Chickasawhatchee Creek and Calhoun County to the west (Figure 4). The majority of the county lies wtihin the Dougherty Plain, "a name given to the smooth country of southwest Georgia."[7] Unique to the county are the many natural depressions, large and small, referred to as limesinks. Some limesinks are cultivated, others filled with water, while others are swampy.[8] The Flint River runs through the county in a north to south direction and was paramount to the early settlement, development, and prosperity of Albany and the surrounding region. The river acted as a means of transportation, shipping, and trade throughout the region. Following the cessation of the Creek Nation lands, settlements emerged alongside the Flint River. With the forced removal of the Indians by 1834, towns quickly developed, among which was the settlement of Albany.

In 1835, Alexander Shotwell, a Quaker from New England, acquired Land Lots 323 and 324 of the First Land District of Baker County. The land was surveyed and town lots laid out with Broad Street named as the east-west line between the two Land Lots. Shotwell's plan for the town "included wide, well-shaded streets."[9] The first to settle the town was Nelson Tift in 1836. Tift named the settlement Albany and embarked on the establishment of a cotton trade along the Flint River. Within three years, additional land was acquired west of the original lots on Land Lots 333 and 334. By 1839, the settlement had become the marketing center for cotton growers throughout southwest Georgia, and Albany received its official charter as a city. As growth of the City, Tift sold land for the expansion of the City to the north and south. The streets constructed to the north as part of this expansion include the eastern sections of present-day Residence, Tift, and Socity Avenues. Albany had grown to such a degree that the formation of Dougherty County from Baker was deemed necessary by 1853 (Figure 6).[10]

The arrival of the train to Albany in 1857 opened the region considerably. Initially intended primarily for the shipment of cotton and other produce, passenger cars were soon added with trips to Macon, Savannah, and Augusta. The railroad propelled the economic vitality of Albany, as well as promoted increased tourism and population growth. As the railroad grew in popularity, steamboat travel and trade along the Flint River declined dramatically. [11]

Dougherty County's reliance on cotton production and slave labor made it difficult for the region to rebound following the Civil War and emancipation. While sharecropping replaced slave labor on plantations and farms, the region's economy was heavily shaken. Gradually, a resurrgence in growth and development occurred, bridges constructed across the Flint River, and the railroad industry re-establishmed. By 1885, downtown Albany was flourishing once more, boasting three rail lines.[12] The vision of a "New South," which took hold throughout the southeastern United States following Reconstruction, argued that the South should develop as a new economy focused on industrial capitalism and economic diversification. Although cotton production and processing remained paramount to the economy, crop diversification, particularly pecan production, and the increasing importance of Albany as a rail center within the region, contributed to a resurgence in the city's economy during the latter years of the 19th century. By the turn-of-the-century, Albany was referred to as the World's Pecan Center.[13]

An 1885 bird's eye view of Albany reflects the strength of the city, and is evidence of its expanding residential development beyond the downtown core (Figure 7). As the map demonstrates at its upper left quadrant, lands west of Madison Street remained undeveloped farmland. This area would later develop as what is locally referred to as "Rawson Circle/Park." Following a detrimental flood in 1897, development of the city was re-focused to the north and a number of planned suburban residential neighborhoods sprang up throughout the late-19th and early-20th century. The first of these neighborhoods, North Albany, led to the rapid residential expansion of the City.

Twentieth century Albany experienced steady growth and continued prosperity. By 1910, numerous passenger trains arrived daily to Albany. That same year, the Phoebe Putney Memorial Hospital was formed. Between 1912 and 1920, a street car operated in the city, but eventually ceased as reliance on the automobile intensified. "City-wide beautification efforts began with the creation of public parks, including Tift Park located on 5th Avenue, and the planting of oak trees."[14] Oak trees and flowering shrubs were planted along street right-of-ways throughout residential areas. These tree-lined streets create a majestic panorama for which Albany is famed.

During the 1920s through the 1960s, Albany was a thriving metropolis and destination point for all of southwest Georgia. "Slappey Drive was the 'outskirts' of town with the first paving project for that thoroughfare not started until 1947."[15] The desire to live in a suburb on the edge of town "brought about much development of the numbered avenues in the part of town most frequently referred to as Rawson Circle."[16]

As planned residential development expanded the City to the north, west, and south, various trends continued, including an alley system which promoted city beautification as garages and barns remained hidden from public view and could be accessed only via rear alleyways. World War II triggered another tremendous period of economic growth and residential expansion, caused in part by the establishment of nearby Turner Field military base.[17] By the 1960s, Albany was among the fastest growing city's in the United States.[18] Between 1940 and 1970, the county population increased from 19,055 to 80,000. However, despite the growth in population, Albany's commerce and industry were relocating from downtown to larger plazas on the edge of the City.[19]

Photograph 1. Tift Park Community Pool, 2014

With a large percentage of black residents, and a highly segregated climate, Albany was at the foreground of the Civil Rights movement during the early years of the 1960s. The "Albany Movement" was formed in 1961 with a mission of integrating the City. Numerous protests, sit-ins, and marches ensued in 1961 and 1962. Martin Luther King Jr. spoke at a rally in Albany in December of 1961, and led a march on City Hall in which all participants, including King, were arrested. The Albany Movement was ultimately victorious, and the city desegregated that year.[20] Despite the victory, much of the white community made deliberate attempts to avoid integration of public facilities. Among those occurrences was the City's surplus sale of the Tift Park community pool and tennis courts to a private entity in 1963. This strategy was a common reaction to Civil Rights movements throughout the southeast. Another strategy commonly applied was the removal of seats from public libraries to prevent integration.[21] The racial tensions during the 1960s led to "white flight" to the suburbs, which subsequently resulted in a decline of residents, businesses, and commerce within the city limits.[22]

Albany's downtown has suffered since the 1970s as businesses and customers have moved to the larger shopping centers and malls west of the downtown district. Historic commercial blocks in downtown were demolished in the 1980s to accommodate the construction of modern government buildings. In 1994, a 500-year flood damaged or destroyed much of historic downtown Albany, and the need for economic revitalization of the City was paramount. Historic resources surveys, preservation plans, and the establishment of Design Guidelines are among the various efforts that have been made to promote the preservation of the City since the flood.

RESIDENTIAL DEVELOPMENT WITHIN THE SURVEY AREA

The survey area is comprised of a number of planned residential neighborhoods representing Albany's tremendous growth throughout the early- to mid-20th century. Each neighborhood exhibits unique character-defining elements; however, a sense of cohesion is evident, particularly the majestic oak-lined streets throughout the survey area. A map depicting the boundaries of the various neighborhoods is included as Figure 9. Today, the neighborhoods are collectively referred to as Rawson Circle/Park in reference to two of the primary subdivisions within the survey area.

Arcadia, historically known as the North Addition, or North Albany, began development in 1892 north of the Old Northside residential area.[23] Arcadia is considered the first development beyond the limits of the original four land lots within which the City of Albany was established. As historically planned, the neighborhood was to be bounded by Seventh Avenue to the north, Society Street to the south, Front Street to the east, and by North Davis Street to the west (see Figure 8). The boundaries of Arcadia evolved throughout the early-20th century, as additional neighborhoods were planned. Today, the boundaries of Arcadia do not extend past Monroe Street and Palmyra Road to the west. Hilsman Heights (partially located within the survey area), Tift Park, and the Hines Place Subdivision were both formed from portions of Arcadia, or North Albany. Figure 10 delineates the boundaries of the western portion of present-day Arcadia, Tift Park, Hilsman Heights, and Hines Place.

Tift Park, established c.1910 as the first municipal park in Albany, is situated at the northwest corner of present-day Arcadia and is bordered to the north by 7th Avenue, Palmyra Road to the west, Jefferson Street to the east, and 5th Avenue to the south. The park was named in honor of Nelson Tift, one of the early founders of Albany.[24] Tift Park is listed on the National Register. Residences constructed along 5th Avenue fronting Tift Park are among the grandest in Albany. These include 404 and 406 5th Avenue, and 1107 N. Jefferson Street.

Hilsman Heights began development in 1914 and was formed from the western portion of the North Albany/Arcadia neighborhood. The 1914 "Subdivision A" (Figure 11) was expanded in 1915 to include two additional blocks to the west. According to the 1915 plat, the entire area was referred to as "Rawson Park and Hilsman Heights" (Figure 12). This addition would later evolve into the larger historic subdivision known as Rawson Circle and Rawson Park. The original "Subdivision A" of Hilsman Heights, as planned in 1914, is bounded by Madison Street to the west, Palmyra Road and Monroe Street to the east, and 2nd Avenue to the south. The portion of Hilsman Heights located within the survey area includes resources fronting the south side of 5th Avenue, north to the intersection of Palmyra Road and Madison Street. The southern section of the neighborhood is located within the existing local Albany Historic District.

The neighborhood presently referred to as Rawson Circle is the earliest development within the larger Rawson Park neighborhood. Rawson Circle was first planned in 1915 with the expansion of the Hilsman Heights neighborhood west two blocks to N. Davis Street. Figure 12 shows the two-block expansion that was then referred to as Rawson Park. The Rawson Circle subdivision, which includes multiple parks, introduced new suburban design elements to the city which were popular during the early- 20th century. Characteristics such as winding streets and larger lots, as well as a park-like setting drew the area's most affluent residents. Rawson Circle is most noted for its streets lined with mature oak trees, continuing the tradition of city beautification in early-20th century Albany. The neighborhood was developed by C. W. Rawson, the grandson of Nelson Tift, founder of Albany. Rawson is also responsible for numerous city improvements.[25]

The Rawson Circle development, which is the earliest development within the larger Rawson Park neighborhood, retains its historic winding street pattern, and consists of two large circles and various parks, including the northern half of present-day Hilsman Park. Rawson Circle quickly expanded as multiple additions were designed throughout the 1920s, 1930s, and early 1940s. As the neighborhood developed westward, the winding roads gave way to a defined grid pattern reminiscent of the early development of the City of Albany. The gridded streets tend to be associated with the Rawson Park expansion of Rawson Circle.

The following historic plat maps reflect the evolution of Rawson Circle and Rawson Park. The maps depict the planned development of the neighborhoods through 1942 (Figures 13 through 17). Throughout the 1920s to 1940s, streets and sidewalks were constructed and lots were laid out. The c.1935 aerial photograph (Photograph 2, Page 21) shows residential construction in the Rawson Circle neighborhood, as well as the beginning of the development of the grid-like street pattern towards the west. The aerial not only shows the planting of the small oak trees along the streets, but also demonstrates that the area that Rawson Circle gradually absorbed was predominantly farmland in 1935. The 1942 plat expanded the neighborhood north to 8th Avenue. Although Rawson Circle and Rawson Park are more or less considered a single entity, the earlier Rawson Circle is recognized as a distinct subdivision defined by its unique layout and grand residences.

Note the construction of streets west of the original neighborhood as plans for its expansion began to be carried out. Land to the north and west remained undeveloped farmland at this time.

Palmyra Heights was first laid out in 1925 (Figure 18). Like Rawson Circle/Park, Palmyra Heights boasts impressive oak trees lining its streets. Unlike Rawson Circle, however, Palmyra Heights was designed with a gridded street plan similar to the "Rawson Park Addition" to its north. The neighborhood was developed by the Palmyra Company, which was established shortly following a flood in 1925 that devastated Albany with waters reaching nearly 36 feet.[26] That same year, Palmyra Heights was laid out north of downtown on higher ground (Plat Book 1, Page 88) as "Subdivision A." By 1928, the Palmyra Company conveyed the streets and alleys within the neighborhood to the City of Albany.[27] Developed between the 1920s and 1940s by middle to upper class residents, the majority of its residential lots and dwellings were relatively smaller than those constructed in Rawson Circle.

The 1925 plat shows Palmyra Heights encompassing the southern half of present-day Hilsman Park, as well as several lots along the east side of Van Buren Drive. The plat map also indicates that 3rd Street (3rd Avenue by 1935) crossed the park in an east-west direction. The 1935 plat, "Addition to Rawson Park" (Figure 15) confirms the 1925 northern boundaries of Palmyra Heights, as well as the existence of a separate park located between 4th and 5th Avenues. Over time, streets between these parks were abandoned, and Hilsman Park absorbed the smaller park north of 4th Avenue.

Plat Book 1, Page 88

Although the original boundaries of Palmyra Heights extended to include the southern half of present-day Hilsman Park, the park itself is most often associated with Rawson Circle. Albany-Dougherty County property records identifies the park as being within Rawson Circle. As such, for purposes of this survey, and recommendations for future preservation initiatives, the entirety of Hilsman Park is considered part of the historic Rawson Circle neighborhood. Those resources located on the east side of the park along Van Buren Street remain included within the historic, and the present boundaries of Palmyra Heights.

Palmyra Heights Subdivision B was laid out south of the original Palmyra Heights neighborhood in 1940. Subdivision B was developed to accommodate low to middle-income housing. Many of Albany's upper-class black populous resided in Palmyra Heights Subdivision B, and the southern section of Subdivision A. Like the earlier neighborhoods, Subdivision B is characterized by the grand oak trees lining its streets. Subdivision B is also home to Albany High School and Hugh Mills Stadium.

Cleveland Heights developed during the 1940s as a subdivision of the larger Eugmar Neighborhood, which primarily occupies land west of Slappey Boulevard. Cleveland Heights is situated between Slappey Boulevard and Cleveland Street, abutting the west side of Palmyra Heights Subdivisions A and B. The neighborhood is primarily low to middle-class housing with a scattering of commercial and industrial buildings located near its south end and fronting Slappey Boulevard to the west. Only a portion of Cleveland Heights is situated with survey area (see Figure 10).

Collectively known as Rawson Circle/Park today, the neighborhoods that comprise the survey area reflect the rapid early- to mid-20th century residential development of the City of Albany. The oak-lined streets of the neighborhoods create an inimitable residential landscape for which Albany is famed (Photograph 3). Although each neighborhood is characterized by its own attributes, architectural types and styles, as well as the planned landscape elements, particularly the mature oak trees, ultimately unite the various neighborhoods situated between N. Madison Street and Slappey Boulevard.

IV. SURVEY FINDINGS

LOCATION AND SETTING

The survey area is comprised of a total of 841 parcels, two parks with unassigned tax parcels, and the six historic residential neighborhoods detailed in Chapter III (see Figure 10). The project area is located north, northwest, and west of the existing Albany Historic District as shown in Figure 3. Its development exemplifies Albany's tremendous period of economic and population growth during the early to mid-20th century, and the rapid suburban expansion of the City north of the downtown core. The area embodies characteristics of evolving ideals on planned residential suburban development, as well as City Beautification efforts popular throughout the State during this period.

The section of the survey area located east of N. Madison Street includes portions of Hilsman Heights and Arcadia, as well as the National Register-listed Tift Park. This area has the highest concentration of professional buildings, particularly those associated with nearby Phoebe Putney Memorial Hospital. While a few resources within this area are non-historic, the majority are historically residential buildings that were later adapted to accommodate commercial or professional uses.

The survey area consists of gridded streets, as well as the winding, picturesque street layout planned for the initial Rawson Circle subdivision. The gridded streets run in an east-west direction and include 1st Avenue to 9th Avenue with 9th Avenue being the northernmost street within the survey area. South of 1st Avenue, the straight streets are named, rather than numbered, and include (from north to south) Rosedale Avenue, W. Society, W. Tift, and W. Residence Avenues. Streets aligned in a north-south direction include (from west to east) Haley, N. Cleveland, N. Harding, M. Van Buren, N. McKinley, N. Davis, N. Madison, and N. Monroe Streets. Palmyra Road is aligned in a northwest-southeast direction and is among the early roads leading into downtown Albany. Rawson Drive and Rawson Circle more or less make up the "circular" plan of the original Rawson Circle subdivision. Portions of N. Davis Street, 4th Avenue, and 7th Avenue located within the earliest addition of Rawson Circle conform to the winding street plan. Triangles within this area were formed by the intersections of various roads creating small designed parks that contribute to the idyllic setting of the neighborhood. Similarly, roads surrounding Hilsman Park, a natural depression (also known as a limesink) within the heart of the survey area, meander somewhat to conform to the shape of the park. These include N. Van Buren Street and 5th Avenue.

Slappey Boulevard, located west of the survey area and aligned in a north-south direction is a busy thoroughfare lined with commercial development. Resources directly east of Slappy Boulevard were excluded from the survey area due to their proximity to the commercial street, and their inherent loss of historic integrity.

Streetscapes and Alleys

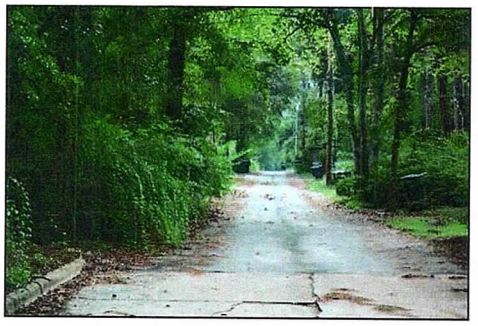

East-west residential streets within the survey area are between 100 and 120 feet in width, while the north-south streets are approximately 80 feet wide.[28] Those east-west streets located near the north end of the survey area, such as 7th and 8th Avenues, are slightly narrower with an average width of 80 feet. The winding streets throughout the earliest section of Rawson Circle are between 60 to 70 feet in width.

Streets throughout the survey area are lined with concrete or granite curbing. While many streets feature concrete sidewalks on one or both sides of the street, those within the original Rawson Circle development lack sidewalks. Common throughout the entire survey area are the grand oak trees lining the streets. The oak trees predominantly occur along the east-west roads and the winding streets of Rawson Circle. In many instances, the mature oaks create the impression of a natural tunnel down the residential streetscape. The rare, yet majestic, occurrence of Spanish moss hanging from the mature oak trees is essentially confined to trees lining N. Van Buren, east of Hilsman Park.

Photograph 4. Oak-Lined Streets along N. Van Buren Street, 2014

Alleyways. Streets within the survey area aligned in an east-west direction include narrow alleys behind residential lots. Planned alleys are also part of the original design of Rawson Circle with alleyways cutting through the large "circles." Many of the alleys are paved, while others remain unpaved dirt roads. A large number of the properties feature fencing or plantings along the rear to provide a degree of privacy from the alley. In addition, a number of properties have rear apartment dwellings, accessed from the alley. Garages and driveways are also common along the alleyways thereby eliminating the need for street-side parking. While these planned alleyways provide "traditional pragmatic uses as locations for utilities, service delivery, and refuse collection," they inevitably create an intriguing urban landscape, and oftentimes serve as place for socializing, walking, and playing.[29] Albany's residential alleys are among the most intriguing designed landscape elements within the survey area, and provide a glimpse into the goings-on within the neighborhood that would typically go unnoticed.

Photograph 5. Typical Alley Scene, 2014

Photograph 6. Unpaved Alley in Rawson Circle, 2014

Lot Size. The average size of individual planned lots ultimately determines the scale and form of the dwelling constructed within that parcel, in turn, contributing to the overall character of a streetscape. Trends in architectural types and styles, as well as the distribution of low-income versus middle- and upper-class residences are largely related to the original planned design of the neighborhood. Lots vary in size throughout the survey area; however, lot size tends to be relatively consistent within a particular planned development or neighborhood.

Due to the curvilinear roads and irregular-shaped blocks within earlier Rawson Circle and Rawson Park phases, lot size and shape varies, with the largest parcels located within the "circles." These lots average approximately 100 feet by 200 feet to 100 feet by 250 feet. The first Rawson Circle development was designed to encourage the city's affluent residents to construct grand "suburban" dwellings within a picturesque siting. As the neighborhood expanded to the larger Rawson Park, adopting earlier trends in development by incorporating a grid layout, the size of lots was reduced to approximately 60 to 70 feet by 195 feet. Palmyra Heights Subdivision A was laid out with the largest lots (~100 feet by 275 feet) fronting the north side of 3rd Avenue, followed by slightly smaller, irregular-shaped lots along Van Buren Street and surrounding Hilsman Park. Lots become more compact toward the southern half of Subdivision A. It is not surprising that the largest houses, as well as the most stylistically embellished in Palmyra Heights, tend to be found along 3rd Avenue and Hilsman Park. Palmyra Heights Subdivision B was designed with relatively narrow lots averaging approximately 60 feet by 210 feet. These tend to be somewhat larger than those in the southern section of Subdivision A. Cleveland Heights features the smallest lots within the survey area, ranging in size from 70 feet by 133 feet to 70 feet by 160 feet. A large number of American Small Houses and compact Ranch houses occupy lots within Cleveland Heights.

Residential landscaping and setback play an essential role in creating a distinctive streetscape setting. Consistency in the setback of residential dwellings is observed along individual streets creating uniformity in the streetscape. The majority of properties within Rawson Circle, Rawson Park, and the northern half of Palmyra Heights Subdivision A are maintained grassed yards. Some feature tall, mature pine trees creating a natural setting. A larger number of properties within the southern section of the project area exhibit casual, or unplanned, landscaping, and oftentimes the dirt yard is utilized for parking. Few individual properties exhibit fencing along the front of the lot. Concrete, brick, or stone paths leading from the sidewalk or street are common characteristics along the streetscapes, and are oftentimes lined with shrubs or other small plantings. Driveways extend either from the street, or a rear alley. Driveways extending from the streets include paved, concrete, dirt/gravel, and concrete strips. Carports or detached garages tend to be situated near the rear of the property, unless integral to the design of a house, such as a port-cochere.

FUNCTION

Among the 846 parcels and resources identified within the survey area, 28 parcels are vacant lots. A number of the vacant lots have been absorbed into larger lots and remain undeveloped parcels. Two small parks not associated with a tax parcel are also located within the survey area. Appendix A includes a list of all parcels, including the two parks lacking official parcel numbers for a total of 843 line items. Taking into account the 26 vacant parcels, a total of 817 resources, including buildings, parks, and designed landscapes are identified within the survey area. A scattering of professional or commercial spaces (30) are situated along the fringes of the survey area, near high-traffic roads including Slappey Boulevard, N. Madison Street, and 5th Avenue on the south side of Tift Park. The majority of these resources (24) are historic, single-family residential dwellings that have been adapted for commercial or professional use. They are identified in the inventory in Appendix A as single dwellings and included in the analysis of residential architecture within the survey area. Three of the commercial buildings were erected after 1974. Seven (7) resources are parks or designed landscapes. In addition, there are five (5) recorded auxiliary buildings, four (4) churches, four (4) educational facilities, three (3) social meeting halls, and three (3) athletic facilities, including ball fields. Residential resources account for the majority of the resources with a total of 784, nearly 96% of the total 817 resources located within the survey area.

DATES OF CONSTRUCTION

The majority of the surveyed historic resources located within the survey area were constructed during the first half the 20th century, with an overwhelming number constructed during the 1940s. Table 1 provides a breakdown of resources (total 818) by date of construction. The only resource dating prior to the 1920s is Tift Park, which was designed c.1910. Residential development occurred during the 1920s beginning in the Arcadia/Tift Park area, gradually spreading westward as new subdivisions were planned. The table clearly demonstrates an unprecedented increase in building activity prior to and immediately following World War II during the 1940s. This surge in development is closely linked to the establishment of the nearby Turner Field military base which fueled the development of low- to middle-class residences within Albany. Whereas the earlier development primarily consisted of middle- to upper-class dwellings. Nearly fully developed by the close of the 1940s, construction within the survey area continued throughout the 1950s and 1960s, yet at a much lower rate. The number of post-1974 resources within the district is a mere 18. Figure 21 shows the spread of development between 1920 and 1950.

PARKS AND DESIGNED LANDSCAPES

Photograph 7. Former Carriage Trails within Tift Park, 2014

Seven parks, gardens, and planned landscapes were observed in the survey area. Albany's oldest and largest planned landscape is the National Register-listed Tift Park, designed c.1910. The original plan called for a looping carriage trail lined with oak trees. While the carriage trail is no longer used, the majestic oak trees lining its path survive and are reminiscent of Albany's early efforts to promote city beautification projects. Between the 1930s and 1977, a small zoo occupied a portion of Tift Park. A community pool (extant) was constructed in the 1950s.[30] The park includes a c.1965 office building, Boys and Girls clubhouse, tennis courts, a gazebo, and walking trails, among other recreational elements.

Photograph 8. Juanita Park, 2014

Five of the seven designed landscapes within the survey area are included within the historic Rawson Circle subdivision as delineated in Figure 10. Ben Bolt Park and Juanita Park are identified on the 1922 survey plat of Rawson Circle located east of the two large circles. Today, these small parks, part of the original picturesque design of the neighborhood, survive as grassed spaces, or triangles, between residential streets. Sherman Park, located at the intersection of N. Davis and 7th Avenue, is first identified on the 1935 plat map of the Rawson Park addition (see Figure 16). Brosnan Park (formerly Ivey Park and 7th Avenue Park) is located at the intersection of Palmyra Road and 7th Avenue. Brosnan Park is also shown on the 1935 plat. These informal parks are grassed with a scattering of mature oak trees, and contribute to the natural, picturesque landscape of the "Rawson Circle/Park Neighborhoods."

Photograph 9. Hilsman Park, 2014

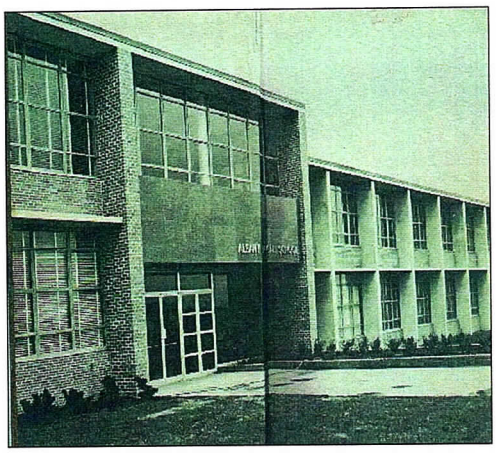

Hilsman Park, also referred to as the "Lime Sink," is a natural depression that has evolved over time into a large, informal park located between the historic Rawson Circle and Palmyra Heights neighborhoods. As shown on historic plat maps of the two neighborhoods, Hilsman Park consisted of three smaller parks separated by 3rd and 4th Avenues. The portions of these streets were abandoned, and the larger park formed. During the 1950s, the natural depression that makes up the park, also called a limesink, was reportedly flooded to create a lake. The water quickly dried, as well as all aspirations of a water feature within the neighborhood. Today, the limesink is an open, grassed field, encircled by a dirt walking trail. A small garden is located at its north end, and the Albany Federated Garden Club (808 S. 5th Avenue) erected its clubhouse c.1955 also at its north end. Mature oak trees surround the perimeter of the park, limiting the view of the surrounding streets.

The seventh park identified within the survey area is located along the western boundary at 1007 5th Avenue and is referred to as the 5th Avenue Park. The informal park is an open grassed field surrounded by mature oak and pine trees. The small park provides a recreational space for residents within the western section of the Rawson Park neighborhood.

EDUCATIONAL BUILDINGS

A total of four education-related buildings are located within the survey area, all of which are within the Palmyra Heights subdivisions (A and B). Two of the four educational buildings are modern construction located at 700 N. Cleveland Street and 730 W. Tift Avenue. The smallest is a c.1945 T-plan schoolhouse with a cross-gabled roof and drop-siding exterior. The schoolhouse, formerly used as a kindergarten, is located at the rear of a residential lot at 1003 W. 3rd Avenue. The third, and final Albany High School was constructed in 1955 at 801 W. Residence Avenue. The linear, International Style school building has grown considerably since its construction, with numerous large-scale additions along its rear. Based on observations during the field survey, it appears that alterations to the original high school building include the replacement of exterior windows and doors that are not in keeping with the originals.

ATHLETIC FACILITIES

Photograph 13. Hugh Mills Stadium, 2014

Among the three sports facilities identified within the survey area are a non-historic (c.2000) athletics field associated with Albany High School located at 712 W. Tift Avenue. Also associated with the High School is the 1936 Hugh Mills Stadium (formerly Albany Municipal Auditorium) (Photograph 13). Constructed on a lime sink, the stadium underwent substantial renovations and additions in 1963 and 1995.[31] With the expansion of Rawson Park north to 8th Avenue, a large sports complex consisting of multiple ball fields, concessions, and restroom facilities was constructed between 8th and 9th Avenues during the 1950s. The sports complex creates a large, shared social and recreational space that unifies the two streets. In doing so, 8th and 9th Avenues form a distinct residential neighborhood within the survey area.[32]

CHURCHES

Only four church-related buildings were identified in the survey area. One is a modern, metal facility associated with the adjacent Israel's Temple Church at 721 W. Society Avenue. The latter was constructed in 1952 and is a front-gabled church with a brick veneer and narrow, round-arched windows featuring red panes. The Cathedral of Faith Ministries, located at 612 N. Cleveland Street, is a contemporary style front-gabled church constructed c.1955. The church features a unique, triangular projecting bay on the façade, square bell tower with steeple, and multi-paned stained glass windows with decorative patterning. A large-scale addition is located on its north elevation. The largest of the churches is located within the historic Rawson Circle subdivision at 611 6th Avenue. The Seventh Day Adventist Church was built in 1963 and is a good example of a Temple Front church with Colonial Revival stylistic influences.

SOCIAL HALLS

There are three social halls located within the survey area: the Federated Women's Garden Club (1941), the Federated Garden Club (c.1955), and the former Boys and Girls Club (1966). The latter is a concrete block facility, linear in design, with a large rear addition. The building was constructed adjacent to the Tift Park swimming pool following the surplus sale of the pool from the City to a private entity in an attempt to prevent integration. Both the clubhouse and pool are no longer in use. Both are located within the boundaries of the National Register-listed Tift Park.

Photograph 15. Federated Women's Garden Club, 1012 N. Van Buren Street, 2014

The Federated Women's Garden Club, located at 1012 N. Van Buren Street, reflects Colonial Revival stylistic embellishments. The one-story clubhouse features a brick exterior painted white, a gable-on-hip roof and a partial-width portico with square columns. The unique design of the building, particularly its roof shape and placement of the portico creates the appearance of a center block-with-wings form that most often exhibits Colonial Revival influences.

The Federated Garden Club, located at the northeast corner of Hilsman Park, also features a white-painted brick exterior. The clubhouse lacks a defined architectural style with a relatively plain façade and minimal ornamentation.

RESIDENTIAL ARCHITECTURE

Historic residential architecture accounts for nearly all of the resources within the survey area. The variety of types and styles observed reflect trends in lower- to upper-class residential architecture popular throughout the country during the early- to mid-20th century. Further, the distribution of particular types and styles (or lack thereof) depict patterns in development as the area expanded and new subdivisions and additions were planned.

Of the 784 residential resources within the survey area, the majority are single-family dwellings (total of 650), followed by 132 multi-family dwellings including duplexes and apartment buildings.

The majority of the residential buildings are single story. Approximately 80 are 1 ½-stories, and 65 residential resources are two-story. A very small number of dwellings were identified as split level. Two-story residential resources are scattered throughout the project area; however, a large collection of both single-family dwellings and multi-family apartment buildings appear to be grouped within the early subdivisions of Rawson Circle and Rawson Park. Others are found along 5th Avenue in the Arcadia neighborhood, and along 3rd Avenue and Hilsman Park in Palmyra Heights Subdivision A. The formal two-story, single-family dwellings tend to be associated with the area's more affluent residents. A number of modest, two-story duplexes lacking stylistic adornment are found throughout the neighborhood as well.

Materials. The most popular exterior siding observed within the survey area is brick veneer. A large number of buildings exhibit asbestos shingles siding (historic) or modern vinyl siding. Exteriors clad in wood typically exhibit drop siding, with a few examples of weatherboard and board-and-batten. Brick foundations predominate throughout the survey area. Few resources display a brick pier foundation with infill brick or concrete blocks. Roof shapes and pitches vary throughout the survey area, but tend to directly correlate to the architectural type and design of the dwelling. Asphalt-shingled roofs are the predominate roof cladding, followed by asbestos shingles, and corrugated metal. Single-story front porches are the most common. While many are full-width, the majority are partial-width. The placement of the porch, as well as its width, are closely tied to the building type and architectural style applied to the resource. Historic port-cocheres attached to the side elevation of a residence are common among the middle- to upper-class dwellings. These properties typically feature a driveway that travels through the port-cochere to a detached garage near the rear of the lot.

Alterations. Alterations and additions to residential dwellings were observed throughout the survey area. However, the greatest loss of historic materials tends to be found on those residential resources adapted for commercial use, as well as those converted from single-family to multi-family use. Residential resources currently used as rental properties also tend to exhibit a higher degree of alteration and modern applications. Among the middle- to upper-class housing, the most common alterations include large rear additions, and the enclosure of porches and port-cocheres. Instances in which a port-cochere has been enclosed, a driveway is often observed leading directly to the enclosure. Among the most common alterations observed during the survey include the application of vinyl siding, the replacement of historic wood sash windows with metal or synthetic sash, porch enclosures and modifications, new roofing, and side and rear additions. Other alterations observed, though less frequent, include chimney removal, rearrangement of entry doors, the construction of detached carports, and the enclosure of historic carports/garages, the latter being a character-defining element of the area's Ranch houses.

Residential Types and Forms. A variety of historic residential building types, or forms, are present in the survey area. Ranch houses account for a high percentage of the resources with a total of 280 examples, or approximately 34%. The American Small House follows with a total of 167 representations (approximately 21%). English Cottages account for 103 (~13%) resources, followed by 89 bungalows, 37 (~5%) examples of a Georgian cttage or Georgian house, seventeen (17) (~2%) mid-20th century two-story houses and duplexes, and 13 (~1.6%) multi-family apartment buildings.

In addition, rare occurrences of Lustron homes, Gabled Wing Cottages and L-Plan houses, Central Block with Wings, and double shotgun, among others are found within the survey area. While these residential types are common throughout the nation during the early- to mid-20th century, their occurrences within the survey area are limited but contribute to the range of house types within Rawson Circle/Park.

Ranch House

Although the Ranch house serves as a ubiquitous representation of the mid-twentieth century, it draws influence from the early-19th century vernacular architecture of California and the American Southwest. The early-20th century found the ranch form being adapted to modern materials in California, popularized by architects such as Cliff May and further influenced by the Usonian houses of Frank Lloyd Wright. Several cultural factors contributed to the rapid spread of the Ranch House throughout the United States during the mid-20th century. As the automobile allowed for the growth of the residential suburb, governmental housing programs attempted to remedy the effects of the Great Depression. A nationwide response to the post-World-War II housing shortage took advantage of advancements in standardized construction materials and techniques, and the Ranch House was among the most commonly-used suburban form from the late 1940s to the 1970s.[33]

Several architectural features prevail throughout the form of the Ranch house. The Ranch is most often described as "long and low," standing one-story in height. Ranch houses can have multiple roof types, but pitches are often low, and commonly have projecting overhanging eaves. In Georgia, red brick is the most common exterior finish, while materials such as wood and stone can provide aesthetic contrast. Ranch Houses tend to have unobscured front entryways, and facades often feature tripartite windows, with a central picture window and flanking double-hung windows. Screened porches were often incorporated into the house's overall plan, located on the side, front, and rear elevations. While garages were often attached to the house, carports became integrated into house designs.[34] An exploration of several Ranch subtypes as defined in "The Ranch House in Georgia: Guidelines for Evaluation," and how they are represented in the survey area, follows.

Compact Ranch houses are small and simple, remaining rectangular in shape, but having a length-to-width ratio of less than 2:1. They are often less elaborately detailed than other Ranch subtypes, with simpler roof lines. This local example, located at 808 7th Avenue, demonstrates the characteristic compact proportions and mix of exterior finishes, united beneath a low hip roof.

Photograph 17. 916 W. 3rd Avenue, 2014

Linear Ranch houses are simply massed, rectangular in shape, with a length-to-width ratio of 2:1 or greater. Rooflines, projections, and stylistic details all contribute to a long, narrow linear impression. Located at 916 West 3rd Avenue, this Linear Ranch represents the long, narrow proportions and simple massing of the subtype.

Linear with Clusters Ranch house are as long and narrow as Linear Ranch houses, but with rooms at one end that project to the front, back, or both. Low-pitched hip and gable roofs over the clusters contribute to the linear form. The example at right, located at 904 7th Avenue, features a projecting cluster covered by a low hip roof.

Photograph 19. 1230 Rawson Circle, 2014

Courtyard Ranch houses have at least two wings that embrace a courtyard, which is typically located in the front. Built in the Mediterranean Revival style, the Stanberry House at 1230 Rawson Circle is a high-style example of a Courtyard Ranch house. An example at 1002 6th Avenue, the two front-gabled wings extend to the house's rear to create a full courtyard in the back. The rear of the house is not visible from the public right-of-way.

Photograph 20. 913 W. 5th Avenue, 2014

Half-Courtyard Ranch houses feature a half-courtyard, created by the intersection of two wings of the house, where both wings contain living space. As seen in this example, the Jack White House at 913 West 5th Avenue, the effect is often that of a linear ranch house, bent ninety degrees.

Bungalow Ranch houses are proportionally as deep as they are wide. These houses have square plans and large hip roofs. Located at 918 West 4th Avenue, this Bungalow Ranch is a simply-detailed representation of the subtype.

Photograph 21. Bungalow Ranch, 918 W. 4th Avenue, 2014

American Small House

Oftentimes referred to as "Minimal Traditional," the American Small House phenomena has its originals in the Great Depression, spanned World War II, and "reached its climax during the post-WWII nationwide housing shortage and recovery."[35] Throughout this period, three factors unite these houses. 1) the need for low-cost housing, 2) the national response to housing needs from the federal government, building industry, and availability of home loans, among others, and 3) an apparent national goal of providing well-designed, well-built, affordable, small single-family residences.[36]

The American Small House is a small, detached, single-family residence. These single-story houses are compact with a nearly square or rectangular footprint. The roof is usually gabled, the interior is tightly massed, and the exterior is simply styled. Options, or variations, on the basic American Small House plan include small porticoes or stoops, porches, dormers, and side garages. The house could be purchased with small additions, or clusters, to create additional space. In Georgia, these are referred to as Extended American Small Houses.

Photograph 23. Extended American Small House, 813 W. 1st Avenue, 2014

There are few true examples of an American Small House within the survey area. The majority adhere to the Extended American Small House variation. The example at 1001 6th Avenue reflects the compact massing and simple details characteristic of an American Small House. The house at 813 W. 1st Avenue is a good representation of an Extended American Small House. While this house type is most often depicted as having minimal stylistic details, many exhibit modest stylistic influences, with Colonial Revival being the most common. The highest concentration of this house type occurs within the southern half of Palmyra Heights Subdivision A and throughout Subdivision B and Cleveland Heights.

English Cottages are found in large numbers within Palmyra Heights Subdivision A, and the areas of earliest Rawson Circle development. The English Cottage is typically found with English Vernacular Revival stylistic embellishments. This picturesque house type is most distinctive for its cross-gabled massing, and a prominent chimney on its façade. This house type is relatively compact, with a square or rectangular block plan. Projecting gabled bays are common, as well as steeply pitched gabled entrance vestibules, and recessed corner porches. This house type was very popular among middle-class Georgians in the 1930s and 1940s.[37]

Photograph 24. English Cottage, 1201 N. Davis Street, 2014

English Cottages found within the survey vary from modest, middle-class residences, to elegant, high-style examples such as that located at 1201 N. Davis Street.

Grand, two-story interpretations of the English Cottage house type are also found within the survey area. These include 634 5th Avenue located in historic Rawson Circle, and a high-style example at 1107 N. Jefferson Street in the historic Arcadia neighborhood.

Bungalows

The Bungalow is an early- to mid-20th century house type in Georgia occurring in both rural areas and cities and towns. Common features of a bungalow include a rectangular or square shape, one- to one-and-a-half-story massed plan form, a prominent front-gabled or recessed side gabled porch, and overhanging eaves with exposed rafter ends. Windows tend to be multi-paned sash above a single sash. The Craftsman style is most often applied to Bungalows.

Bungalows in the survey area tend to be constrained to the Palmyra Heights subdivisions, and Hilsman Heights. Those in Hilsman Heights are primarily adapted for commercial purposes. Examples of Bungalows within the survey include 713 W. 2nd Avenue, and a modest interpretation at 601 N. Harding Street.

Georgian Cottage and Georgian House

Although the Georgian house type experienced its greatest popularity between 1850 and 1890, occurrences continued well into the 20th century, as is evident within the survey area where the majority of these house type examples were constructed during the 1930s and 1940s. The Georgian plan consists of a central hallway with two rooms on either side. It is nearly square, with a low-pitched hipped or side-gable roof. Two chimneys are common, either on the exterior side elevations, or straddling the roof ridge. This house type is most often seen with Colonial Revival stylistic influences. One-story examples are referred to as "cottages," while the two-story examples are "houses." The Dr. Charles Lamb House at 1225 Rawson Drive is a good interpretation of a Georgian Cottage, and the Leggett House at 631 5th Avenue is an exemplary example of a Georgian House.

Unique to Albany's residential architecture are the few occurrences of Lustron Homes. These steel-framed homes, clad in enameled steel panels, provided efficient, prefabricated solutions to the post-World War II housing shortage, and became a National trend during the post-War years. Constructed by the Strandlunds Lustron Company, 2,500 of these houses were built prior to the company's 1950 bankruptcy. One example in the Rawson Circle/Park neighborhoods is listed on the National Register of Historic Places (711 9th Avenue), and two, 1001 and 1005 W. 2nd Avenue, were determined eligible for the National Register in 1996 but never officially listed.

Duplexes and Apartment Buildings

Photograph 33. Ranch-Type Duplex, 919 8th Avenue, 2014

Photograph 34. Mid-Century Modern Duplex, 803 Rosedale Avenue, 2014

Ninety-two (92) examples of duplex dwellings are scattered throughout the entire survey area, with the greatest concentration in Palmyra Heights and the north and west sections of the later expansions of Rawson Park. The large majority of duplexes are single-story Ranch house-type buildings, and were historically designed to accommodate two families. Many are symmetrical, featuring nearly identical units such as 919 8th Avenue. A smaller number of the duplex dwellings (12) are modest, unadorned Mid-Century Two-Story buildings (historic and non-historic). A typical representation of this duplex type is 803 Rosedale Avenue and 925 W. Society Avenue.

A number of apartment buildings and complexes were constructed within the survey area. Many of the complexes consist of multiple, modest one-story buildings with a central courtyard such as those located at 1011 N. McKinley Street (1942) and 1004 8th Avenue (1961). The majority of the multi-unit buildings within these single-story complexes exhibit a Ranch-type form with low-pitched gabled roofs. The most recent of these complexes tend to be situated near the boundary of the survey, along the high-traffic roads.

Photograph 36. 1011 N. McKinley Street, 2014

Photograph 35. 1004 8th Avenue, 2014

In addition to the single-story apartment buildings and complexes, the survey area boasts numerous large-scale, two-story apartments with distinctive stylistic influences. Among these include a grouping of three Colonial Revival apartment buildings completed in 1939, and located within the earliest Rawson Circle development: the Douglas Apartments at 1107 N. Madison Street, McKemie Apartments at 1111 N. Madison Street, and the Bacon Apartments at 1110 Rawson Circle. The three buildings, though each individually distinct stylistically, are symmetrical in form with a central hall. Another apartment building, located at 911 W. 3rd Avenue, is similar in form and style as the three earlier examples.

Residential Styles

Architectural styles vary throughout the survey area and are representative of styles popular throughout Georgia during the early- to mid-20th century. The distribution of particular styles reflect the concentrations of low-income houses relative to the middle- and upper-class dwellings. For example, houses within the lower- to middle-class developments tend to lack stylistic embellishments and are representative of smaller types such as the American Small House, while English Vernacular Revival is most often applied to upper-income one and two-story English Cottages.

The following chart depicts the popularity of particular styles observed within the survey area. By far, the majority of the resources lack an academic architectural style. As noted, a lack of stylistic adornment is common with American Small Houses and Ranch houses. As these two house types are the most prevalent in the survey area, it is not surprising that the majority of resources lack an academic architectural style. In 2010, the Georgia Historic Preservation Division adopted the term Plain Style, to define Ranch houses and split-level residences lacking ornamentation. The Plain style is generally represented by a red brick exterior, and an emphasis on the form, roofline, and window openings.[38] The Plain style Ranch house is very common across Georgia and Albany. The following provides a brief description of the variety of styles observed in the survey area, as well as a few noted examples of unique styles.

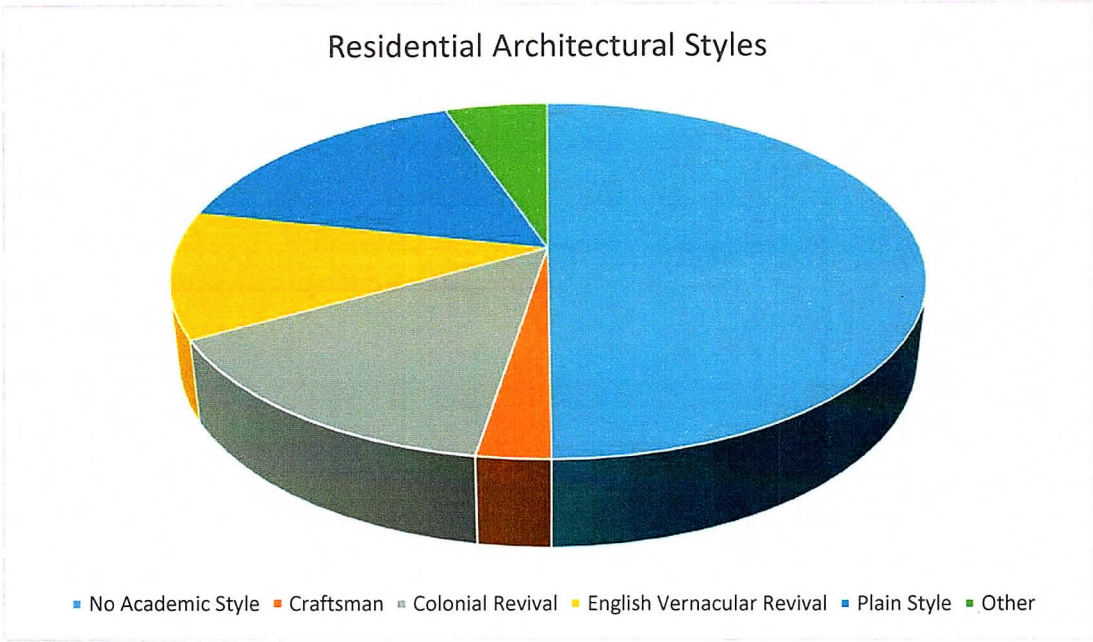

Chart 2. Breakdown of Residential Architectural Styles

Colonial Revival (1890s-1950s) stylistic elements include a symmetrical façade, an accented entry door with fanlights and sidelights, an entry porch with pediment or cornice supported by columns, and roof dormers. The centered entry porch is often the most prominent, and character-defining feature of the Colonial Revival style. Traditional details in modern materials such as a dentiled cornice are common features. This style appears on a range of residential forms ranging from American Small Houses (924 W. 3rd Avenue) and Ranch Houses (1202 Rawson Circle) to the more formal Georgian Cottages and Houses (900 W. 3rd Avenue and 504 5th Avenue.

Photograph 42. 504 5th Avenue, 2014

Craftsman Style (1910s-1930s) elements include low-pitched spreading eaves, rectilinear eave brackets, an emphasis on the use of local materials, multi-pane upper sash over single pane sash windows, battered (tapered) porch columns, and a prominent porch. The Craftsman style is most often associated with the Bungalow. Modest interpretations of the style occur in Albany's Rawson Circle/Park neighborhoods. An example of a Craftsman Bungalow identified within the survey area is 912 W. 2nd Avenue.

Photograph 43. 912 W. 2nd Avenue, 2014

Photograph 44. 825 W. 3rd Ave., 2014

English Vernacular Revival (1920s-1940s) strives to imitate the vernacular architectural traditions of medieval Europe. Character-defining elements include steeply pitched roofs, asymmetrical façades, massive chimneys, and round-arched entryways. Brick veneer is the most prevalent exterior cladding, with stuccoed masonry common as well. The use of this style is found throughout the survey area and is most often applied to English Cottage types. It occurs in modest proportions, as well as elaborate adornment on grand structures. Exemplary representations include 825 W. 3rd Avenue, 1112 N. Davis Street, and the Sherman House located at 704 7th Avenue.

Photograph 46. 1112 N. Davis St., 2014

Photograph 45. 704 7th Ave., 2014

In addition to these most prevalent architectural styles occurring within the survey area, additional styles that occur rarely in the survey area are worth noting. These include Dutch Colonial Revival, Mediterranean Revival, mid-century Greek Revival, and Spanish Colonial Revival exemplified by 716 and 804 W. 2nd Avenue.

Dutch Colonial Revival Houses (1920s and 1930s) is influenced by the colonial architecture of the early Dutch colonists. It was a fairly common style throughout Georgia during the 1920s and 1930s. The most prominent characteristic of this style is the steeply pitched gambrel roof. Shed roof dormers, oftentimes full-width, are very common features of this style. Porches are often small, single-story with columns, or may be formed by the eave of the gambrel roof.[39] Among the few examples observed within the survey area, 1108 N. Madison Street and 730 7th Avenue are among the most distinctive representations of Dutch Colonial Revival.

Photograph 47. 1108 N. Madison Street, 2014

Photograph 48. 730 7th Avenue, 2014

Mediterranean Revival (1920s-1930s) is most commonly found in Georgia's suburban neighborhoods, and adopts a combination of elements from both Spanish and Italian vernacular houses in the Mediterranean Sea regions. It is most noted for is smooth stuccoed, or masonry walls, and asymmetrical plan. The roof is often clay-tiled, low-pitched, hipped or gabled. The roof eaves distinguish between the Spanish and Italian stylistic influences. While the Spanish tradition tends to lack eave overhang, the Italian influence will have wide overhanging eaves with exposed rafter ends.

Porches are recessed, arcaded loggias, or open porches. Windows are often arched, and columns or pilasters are used to elaborate openings.[40]

Photograph 49. 405 5th Avenue, 2014

Mid-20th Century Greek Revival is a classical-inspired style of the mid-20th century, adopting elements of Greek Revival of the 1840s-1860s in Georgia. In Albany, this influence is best associated with classical architects such as Edward Vason Jones. Traditional Greek Revival is characterized by prominent columns, pilasters, and wide plain entablatures. A symmetrical façade features a centered, entry door surrounded by sidelights and transom. A low-pitched hipped roof supported by columns is also a character-defining element of the traditional Greek Revival style.[41] In Albany, among the best mid-century interpretations of Greek Revival is Jones' Holman Home at 807 6th Avenue.

Spanish Colonial Revival (1920s and 1930s) is another American colonial revival style that emerged during the 1920s. The style was influenced by the Spanish colonial architecture of the American southwest and Florida, including the mission building traditions of California.[42] This style most often featured a clay tile roof with little eave overhang. Walls were stuccoed, and arched openings and arcaded loggias were common. Casement windows are often applied to Spanish Colonial Revival houses. The roof was often elaborated with the use of curvilinear gables or parapets, and protruding roof beams to emphasize construction methods.[43] Among the four interpretations of this style occurring in the survey area, 716 and 804 W. 2nd Avenue are the most exemplary.

NOTED ARCHITECTS

Based on background research, tour of homes articles, property owner questionnaires, and information provided by the City during the early phases of the survey, a number of noted architects who designed residences within Rawson Circle/Park came to light. These architects followed the Classical school of architecture with numerous representations designed in Albany. The following remarks upon several architect-designed residences within the survey area; however, other unknown examples may occur.

The Georgia School of Classicists contributed greatly to the architectural landscape of the state throughout the mid-twentieth century, and no firm was more well-known than the Atlanta practice of Hentz, Reid & Adler. Directly influenced by beaux-arts classicist Charles McKim, J. Neel Reid and Hal Fitzgerald Hentz began their partnership in 1910 at the first annual exhibition of the Atlanta Chapter of the AIA.[44] Reid and Hentz were joined by Rudolph Adler and Philip T. Shutze in 1911 and 1927, respectively. After Reid's death in 1926, the successful firm was known as Hentz, Adler & Shutze.

As Atlanta began to assume dominance as the leading city in the New South, building boomed throughout the city, and beaux-arts architecture was a frequently chosen style. Hentz, Adler & Shutze became known for their knowledge of the scale and proportions of classical models, and their ability to adapt the neoclassical style to all manner of forms, from public structures such as the Georgia Life Insurance Co. Office building in Atlanta, to private residences throughout Georgia.[45] This firm's work is represented in Albany by the Hodges House, a Colonial Revival structure with Georgian influences, built in 1922.

A native of Albany, Edward Vason Jones (1909-1980) was the first Georgia architect to gain national prominence in the midst of his career. Jones is well-known for his contributions to mid-twentieth century neoclassicism both throughout the Southeast, and in Washington, DC. He developed his skills in Albany, working closely with expert craftsmen like master carpenter Odolph Blaylock, and completed his first project of the lodge at Gillionville Plantation in 1937.[46] Such accomplishments allowed him to apprentice with the prestigious Hentz, Adler, & Shutze between 1938 and 1942. There, he refined his neoclassical style, which he applied on a national scale in the renovation of seven U.S. State Department reception rooms from 1965-1980. He is also responsible for the renovation of twenty-five rooms in the White House, completed throughout the 1970s.[47]

After a brief stint in Savannah, where he advocated for the city's early preservation, Jones returned to Albany in 1948. While he spent a great deal of time working outside of Albany, he contributed greatly to the classical architecture of his hometown. Built from 1949-1951, the Shackelford House, located outside of the survey area, represents the principles of Jeffersonian and Palladian symmetry. Jones also designed the Albany-Dougherty City Hall and Courthouse, which demonstrates New Formalist influences. Within the survey area are four known examples of Jones' design including 924 W. 3rd Avenue (1939), 1001 3rd Avenue (1953), 622 8th Avenue (1952), and the W.C. Holman Jr., Residence (1948) at 807 6th Avenue. The latter is a testament to symmetry and proportions, with clear influence from the Greek Revival style.[48]

Born in Moultrie, Georgia, William Frank McCall studied architecture at Auburn University. He established his own architectural firm in Moultrie in 1957, drawing on the principles of Jeffersonian architecture to construct residences throughout the area. He was a founder of the Georgia Trust for Historic Preservation.[49] Frank McCall designed several homes in Albany, including a Classical Another architect whose work is prominent throughout Albany is Rayburn Webb. After studying architecture at the University of Illinois, he established a practice in Wyoming with a focus on cathedrals and churches, before moving to Albany in the late 1920s.[50] Webb began his architectural practice in Albany after the stock market crash of 1929, and designed a wide range of religious, commercial, and residential structures. In the Rawson Circle/Park neighborhood, his work is represented by several Colonial Revival-style Georgian Houses. The Heinemann House, built in 1941, features elaborate details such as a dentiled cornice, an entryway surrounded by fluted pilasters and an architrave, and a full-width recessed entry porch on an extension.

Harry A. "Bo" MacEwen was a native of Macon, Georgia; however, the majority of his architectural practice was in the Tampa Bay area and around the southeastern United States. During his collegiate architectural studies, he worked closely with Macon-born architect W. Elliott Dunwoody, Jr[51] who educated MacEwen in the principles of classical architecture, while allowing him first-hand experience with Dunwoody's own neoclassical designs in Macon. Both Georgia-based architects designed houses located in the Rawson Park neighborhood. MacEwan MacEwan's James Patterson Home (1950) applies the Federal Revival style to a Ranch house, while Dunwoody designed the Dr. Charles Lamb House, a Colonial Revival-style Georgian cottage in 1938.

V. RECOMMENDATIONS

Among the survey objectives was to evaluate the survey area and its individual resources for the potential expansion of the existing locally-designated Albany Historic District. In addition, a secondary goal of the project was the assessment of potential National Register-eligible historic districts and individual resources identified within the survey area.

POTENTIAL EXPANSION OF THE ALBANY HISTORIC DISTRICT

The criteria and standards for evaluation of individual resources as contributing or non-contributing elements to the local historic district expansion area were determined prior to the field survey and in consultation with the City of Albany. The following criteria was established in determining whether a resource, or individual tax parcel, is a non-contributing element to a potential expansion of the Albany Historic District:

- Vacant parcels
- Date of construction is less than 50 years of age
- Resource greater than 50 years of age that has undergone substantial alterations of both material and form to such a degree that little, if any, historic fabric survives

Among the 844 parcels and two small parks located within the survey area, a total of 55 (6.6%) were determined to be non-contributing elements based on the criteria outlined above. These non-contributing components are scattered throughout the survey area as shown in Figure 22. While a number of properties fronting the south side of 5th Avenue are less than 50 years of age or are vacant parcels, they border the existing historic district, and their exclusion would result in pockets in the district not required to adhere to established design guidelines. The inclusion of these resources or vacant parcels would prevent insensitive development adjacent to important historic resources, including Tift Park. Similarly, the exclusion of the large parcels associated with 730 Tift Avenue,[52] including the adjacent athletic fields, would create a pocket between the existing district and the proposed expansion area. The same strategy would apply to the non-contributing parcels located at 1325 and 1345 North Jefferson Street, which are located on the northeast corner of the survey area boundary and within the National Register boundaries of Tift Park.

Map generated through RuskinArc

[52] It should be noted that 730 Tift Avenue occupies multiple parcels on the Dougherty County tax parcel map. While each of these parcels are identified on the final survey map as non-contributing, they are considered a single parcel for purposes of the survey analysis.

It is recommended that the few non-contributing elements located on the western fringes of the survey area near Slappey Boulevard be excluded from an expansion of the Albany Historic District. These include the following parcels/addresses:

- 1011 1st Avenue West
- 1011 3rd Avenue West
- 1006 5th Avenue West
- 1010 5th Avenue West

Based on the field survey, it is clear that the neighborhoods comprising the survey area, though distinct in some regards, form a cohesive collection of historic residential architecture and planned design elements unique to the city of Albany. With the exception of the properties listed above, the entire survey area reflects an impressive period of growth and prosperity of the City of Albany throughout the early- to mid-20th century. Further, the range of architectural types and styles, and the distinct planned design of each neighborhood epitomize evolving patterns in residential development observed throughout the State of Georgia. Based on our findings, it is the recommendation of History, Incorporated that the expansion of the Albany Historic District follow the boundaries depicted by the dashed red line in Figure 24.

EVALUATING NATIONAL REGISTER ELIGIBLITY

In addition to making recommendations for the proposed Albany Historic District expansion, the Project Team evaluated properties according to the criteria and standards for historic resources established by the National Park Service. This included an assessment of individual eligibility of each surveyed resource for listing in the National Register. In order to meet National Register requirements, the property must be a minimum of 50 years old and retain sufficient integrity to convey the period of time in which they are significant. The National Register recognizes a property's integrity through seven aspects, or qualities.[53] To retain historic integrity, a property should always possess several, and usually most, of the seven aspects. The seven qualities include the following:

- Location The place where the historic property was constructed, or the place where the historic event occurred
- Design Combination of elements that create the form, plan, space, structure, and style of a property
- Setting The physical environment of a historic property
- Materials Physical elements that were combined or deposited during a particular period of time and in a particular pattern or configuration to form a historic property
- Workmanship Physical evidence of the crafts of a particular culture or people during any given period in history or prehistory
- Feeling A property's expression of the aesthetic or historic sense of a particular period of time
- Association Direct link between an important historic event or person and a historic property

The majority, if not all, of the surveyed historic properties (>50 years of age) retain qualities of location, setting, feeling, and association. Single-family residences presently used as a duplex or multi-family dwelling retain quality of association as a residential building. However, those that have been converted into office or commercial space no longer retain the aspect of association. The residential setting and feeling throughout the survey area is unaltered. Properties which have undergone alterations resulting in the loss of historic material (i.e. replacement windows, application of vinyl siding, etc.) were identified as lacking integrity of materials. In the event that a property exhibits insensitive large-scale additions, or has been altered to such a degree that the original form or design of the resource is no longer evident, was determined to lack the quality of design. Finally, numerous architectural styles are characterized by distinct decorative elements or enhancements. When these character-defining features have been removed or altered (ex. Craftsman-style battered posts, Folk Victorian spindlework, Italianate windows, etc.), the quality of workmanship has been compromised.

For those properties that were observed to have retained the majority of these qualities of integrity, an evaluation of their significance based on the National Register criteria was then undertaken. To be considered eligible for the National Register, the property must not only retain integrity, but must possess significance at the local, state, or national level in relationship with similar properties within a specific historic theme, period, or geographic region.[54] To be considered eligible, the property must meet one of the four Criteria. The four criteria are:

A. Are associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad pattern of history; or
B. Are associated with the lives of persons significant in the past; or
C. Embody distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, or represent the work of a master, possess high artistic values, or represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; or
D. Have yielded, or may be likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history

Based on the field survey, evaluation of individual resources, and analysis of architectural patterns, the following properties are known to retain integrity and possess significance at the local level. Therefore, these resources may be individually eligible for National Register listing pending interior observations and additional research. These preliminary recommendations are based on exterior observations only. Review and concurrence by the Georgia HPD would be required in order to formally be determined eligible for the National Register for each resource.

Further, it should be noted that this historic resource survey report does not in any way change Albany's existing individual property or historic district listings in the National Register of Historic Places. Any amendments to existing listings and/or the nomination of additional properties or districts, including those recommended herein, must be made through the National Register of Historic Places process according to 36 CFR 60, as amended.

Evaluation of Potential National Register-Eligible Historic Districts

A historic district possesses a significant concentration, linkage, or continuity of sites, buildings, structures, or objects united historically or aesthetically by plan or physical development. A historic district must be significant, as well as being an identifiable entity. As such, it must meet one of the four National Register criteria addressed above. A historic district is defined geographically by boundaries based upon a shared relationship among the properties constituting the district. District boundaries can encompass resources that lack integrity or association with the established significance of the district. These resources are considered non-contributing elements, and must account for less than 50% of all resources within a district in order for National Register consideration.[55] Generally, resources that were not constructed during the established period of significance, and those exhibiting a high degree of loss of integrity are considered non-contributing. Evaluation of the integrity of individual resources within a district is not typically held to the same standards as when evaluating for individual National Register eligibility.

Based on background research, field survey, and analysis of survey data, History, Incorporated identified two neighborhoods that retain their overall integrity and unique sense of place. Each of the identified historic districts appear to be locally significant under National Register Criterion A in the area of Community Planning and Development, and Criterion C in the area of Architecture. These neighborhoods include historic Rawson Circle/Park and Palmyra Heights Subdivision A as delineated in Figure 10. In addition to the proposed historic districts, an update to the existing Tift Park Historic District should be considered since it was listed in the National Register in 1993, over twenty years ago.

[55] Beth Savage and Sarah Dillard Pope, National Register Bulletin: How to Apply the National Register Criteria for Evaluation. National Park Service, US Department of the Interior, Washington, DC, 2009.

Tift Park Historic District

Since its listing on the National Register in 1993, the boundaries of the historic district remain unaltered. However, a few elements have been lost including a ball field and gazebo. The listing includes the two non-historic maintenance buildings at the northeast corner. Constructed c.1985, these elements would remain non-contributing to the district. The 1966 recreational facility located adjacent to the contributing community pool, and once associated with the Boys and Girls Club, could now be considered a contributing element to the social history of the park. Further, a mid-1960s office building in the center of the park should also be re-evaluated as contributing to the character and evolving history of Tift Park. Based on the present survey findings, we recommend that the Tift Park National Register nomination be updated to expand the Period of Significance through 1966 to include significant resources constructed during the 1960s.

Rawson Circle Neighborhood Historic District

The Rawson Circle Historic District, as delineated in Figure 10, and which includes the earliest Rawson Park expansion, appears eligible under Criterion A in the area of planning and development as an excellent representation of early-20th century "suburban" development that focused on creating a natural, park-like setting with winding streets, small gardens/parks, and plentiful vegetation. The neighborhood is also reflective upon the city's beautification efforts throughout the early- to mid-20th century with the planting of oak trees along all of its streets, and the construction of rear alleys. Lastly, the district is eligible under Criterion C for its wide array of middle- to upper-class residential types and architectural styles.

Historic Rawson Circle encompasses the historic planned subdivisions dating from 1922 to 1942 as depicted in the survey plats in Section III and outlined in Figure 10. Although properties fronting 9th Avenue and those west of Cleveland Street are presently considered as being part of the Rawson Park neighborhood, these areas were not part of the early- to mid-century planned development of the Rawson Park neighborhood and are later expansions (Figure 18). While lots fronting the south side of 8th Avenue were included in the 1935 Rawson Park Addition, the somewhat later development of 8th Avenue is more directly tied to that of 9th and 10th Avenues, as well as the large 8th Avenue Youth Sports Complex situated between 8th and 9th Avenues. Its streetscape, architecture, and overall period of growth shares greater similarities to the streets to the north rather than the historic Rawson Circle and Rawson Park expansion. As such, it is recommended that 8th Avenue be excluded from the potential National Register historic district.

The recommended boundaries for the Rawson Circle Historic District are shown in Figure 25. The recommended historic district extends beyond the survey area into the existing local Albany Historic District. The area shown on the map lacking marked resources is within the existing local district and was not surveyed as part of this project. The blue markers indicate potential contributing resources, the red are non-contributing, and the green are those resources identified as potentially individually eligible for National Register listing.

There are a total of 212 parcels within the surveyed area of the recommended National Register-eligible Rawson Circle Historic District. Among those, eight are vacant lots. These lots were either once the site of a historic resource, or were absorbed into a larger property. As such, these parcels are not assigned a contributing or non-contributing status and are identified on the map with a "?". Therefore, there are a total of 204 resources within the recommended historic district. A total of 192 parcels (~94%) are occupied by residential dwellings including single-family houses, duplexes, and apartment buildings. Included in the proposed district are five planned designed landscapes including small informal gardens and parks that contribute to its park-like setting for which the neighborhood was originally designed. Among the 204 resources within the surveyed area of the district, only six were constructed post-1965 and are considered non-contributing elements. Based on our evaluation, the potential Rawson Circle National Register Historic District contains 177 contributing elements, and only 27 (~13%) non-contributing components. Among the contributing resources, 21 are considered potentially eligible for individual listing in the National Register.

The recommended period of significance is 1922 to 1965, beginning with the initial design and construction of the winding streets, informal parks, and planting of oak trees, through the 50-year development threshold. Residential development began toward the end of the 1920s in the original planned development surrounding the two large circles. By the close of the 1930s, an additional 40 residences were constructed, followed by 79 in the 1940s within both the original "Circle," as well as sections of the later Rawson Park addition to the north and west. Development continued during the 1950s, with an additional 61 resources. By the 1960s, the neighborhood was near capacity and only ten new buildings were erected during that decade.

Residential development in the historic Rawson Circle area of the proposed district is typically larger in scale, with greater stylistic embellishments than those observed in the later Rawson Park expansion. Within the entire district, the Ranch house dominates with a total of 89 examples (~44%), followed by the English cottage (28), Georgian house (14), bungalow (13), American Small House (12), and the Georgian cottage (7). Two Lustron homes are located within the proposed Rawson Circle Historic District (805 and 920 7th Avenue).

Plain-style Ranch houses, and resources lacking an academic architectural style account for 102 resources within the neighborhood. Colonial Revival (48) is the most prominent architectural style, followed by English Vernacular Revival (26). Rare occurrences of architectural styles within the Rawson Circle Historic District include Federal Revival, Mediterranean Revival, and Spanish Colonial Revival. Further, a number of resources within the eligible district were designed by noted Classical architects.

Palmyra Heights Historic District

The proposed Palmyra Heights Historic District encompasses all streets, alleys, and lots as planned by the Palmyra Company in 1925. Excluded, however, from the original plan, is the southern portion of Hilsman Park which was absorbed by the Rawson Circle neighborhood. The proposed district does not include Palmyra Heights Subdivision B located to the south. Subdivision B is a later development comprised of lower-income housing, many in relatively poor to fair condition, and a large high school complex with numerous non-historic additions. The proposed boundaries for National Register listing are shown on Figure 26.

Blue: Contributing, Red = Non-Contributing, Green = Contributing and Individually Eligible

The Palmyra Heights Historic District appears eligible under Criterion A in the area of planning and development. Not only is the neighborhood a planned subdivision with a gridded street plan, the mature oak trees lining its streets, sidewalks, and granite drainage and curbing (in some areas) are indicative of the City's beautification efforts during the early-20th century. Palmyra Heights also appears eligible for National Register listing under Criterion C for its array of architectural types and styles reflecting the tremendous period of growth in Albany during the 1930s and 1940s. The distribution of various architectural types and stylistic embellishments depict various patterns of development, particularly with regards to the distinct clustering of lower versus middle-class dwellings.

The proposed Palmyra Heights Historic District encompasses a total of 238 parcels of land, five of which are vacant lots. Therefore, there are a total of 233 resources, not including auxiliary buildings, within the neighborhood. Among the 233 resources, only 15 (approximately 6%) are considered non-contributing for the purposes of this evaluation due to date of construction or significant loss of historic integrity. Many of the non-contributing elements are located along the southern boundary of the district, near Subdivision B.

Palmyra Heights began development in the 1920s with the construction of less than 10 residential dwellings. Development took hold during the 1930s, particularly along 2nd Avenue and the northern section of the district. The most impressive construction boom occurred in the 1940s. The majority of the 1940s construction was within the southern half of the neighborhood. Development continued during the 1950s at a much lower rate with only 25 new buildings being constructed in the 1950s. Only four resources were constructed in Palmyra Heights since the 1950s.

Due to the tremendous boom in construction during the 1940s, it is not surprising that the distribution of American Small Houses (66, or ~28%) and Ranch Houses (41, ~18%) is primarily constrained to the southern half of the neighborhood as demonstrated in Figure 28. The earlier, more elaborate English Cottage type accounts for 56 of the surveyed resources within Palmyra Heights and tend to be located along 2nd and 3rd Avenues. Bungalows (31) follow a similar distribution; however, some are also located along Rosedale and Society Avenues near the southern end of the neighborhood

Blue = Ranch House, Orange = American Small House, Red= Extended American Small House

Architectural styles within Palmyra Heights are consistent with the types and forms popular during the period of the significance (1922-1966). Of the 233 surveyed resources, 100 lacked an academic architectural style. This lack of style is commonly associated with American Small Houses and Ranch Houses. The distribution of these resources are more or less limited to the southern section of the district. The most popular styles observed in Palmyra Heights are English Vernacular Revival (45) and Colonial Revival (45), followed by Plain-style Ranch houses with a total of 15 resources.

Historic Apartment Buildings of the Rawson Circle/Park Neighborhoods

Due to the number of impressive, early- to mid-20th century apartment buildings, particularly those two-stories in height, it is recommended that the City consider an in-depth survey be conducted, including interior observations and additional research, of the numerous apartment buildings within the present survey area as well as the existing local Albany Historic District. The development of a historic context pertaining to Albany's mid-century apartment buildings, and the possible completion of a National Register Multiple Property Nomination may be a viable option pending further research.

SUMMARY

The historic resources, designed landscapes, and majestic oak-lined streetscapes of the survey area are reminiscent of Albany's unprecedented period of suburban growth (c.1910-1960), its efforts to promote the beautification of the City, and the evolving ideals in residential development and planning. The wide range of architectural types and styles portrays a City meeting the needs of its citizens, from the lower-income families to the most affluent. Despite modern alterations, and the re-purposing of many of the buildings, the majority of the survey area retains excellent integrity with very few modern intrusions. A number of the residential buildings are threatened by abandonment, and numerous rental properties are deteriorating due to lack of general maintenance. The proposed expansion of the local Albany Historic District would benefit the district by incorporating design guidelines aimed to preserve the historic character and vitality of the neighborhood. National Register listing of the Rawson Circle Historic District and Palmyra Heights Historic District, more or less an honorary designation, would promote tourism in Albany, and encourage property owners to properly maintain their unique historic buildings, and ultimately, preserve and protect the neighborhood.
