NOTES ON FORMAT, ORGANIZATION, AND JUSTIFICATION OF INVENTORY:
In the following inventory, which is listed numerically by street address, all resources, both primary and secondary, have been considered either contributing or non-contributing based upon the areas of significance as listed under Criteria A as Agriculture, Religion, and Ethnic Heritage Hand and under C for Architecture and based upon the period of significance of 1756-1963. All non-contributing resources have, therefore, been so noted for being either constructed after 1963 or as having no integrity left to represent the period and areas of significance. A brief architectural description is provided of the primary resource. For additional information see the DSS form at the Department of Historic Resources (DHR). The resources are keyed to the accompanying sketch map using the tertiary number of the DHR-assigned inventory number; for example, the location for 60 Annfield Road (DHR # 021-5025-0071) is marked as 71 on the sketch map. Properties marked with  are already listed in the Virginia Landmarks Register and the National Register of Historic Places.

Annfield Road

60 Annfield Road 021-5025-0071 Other DHR Id #:
Primary Resource Information: Single Dwelling, Stories 1.00, Style: Ranch, 1962
March 2012: Constructed in 1962, the house is a single-story, seven-bay, brick-veneered Ranch. Its cross-gabled roof is clad in asphalt shingles and the gables ends have vinyl siding. The façade features 8/8 wooden sashes with paneled shutters and a three-bay pedimented portico with Tuscan column supports, giving the house a Colonial Revival appearance. A central brick chimney protrudes from the roof just west of the porch. A two-car carport of similar construction is attached to the west end of the house.

*166 Annfield Road 021-0002 Annfield Other DHR Id #: 021-5025-0057
Primary Resource Information: Single Dwelling, Stories 2.00, Style: Classical Revival, 1790
March 2012: This fine Early Classical Revival-style stone dwelling is composed of a two-story main block constructed ca. 1790. The house is seven bays in width and four bays deep. The façade is distinguished by a two-story pedimented portico with Ionic capitals, a dentiled cornice, Chinese Chippendale railing on the second floor, and a lunette window in the pediment. The roof is hipped, clad in slates. The house has fine architectural details including 9/9- and 6/9- sash wood windows with stone jack arches and large voussoirs, a transom with sunburst pattern over the main entrance door, narrow 6/6-sash windows flanking the front door on both levels, stone corner quoins, a modillioned cornice, and a widow's walk with balustrade. The house rests on a raised stone basement and has four lateral stone chimneys. The façade has entry doors on both levels, but the north elevation has only a single door to the first level. The north elevation has a three-bay, single-story porch with a flat roof, supported by Ionic columns. The interior contains intricately carved woodwork. Additions to the house include a one-and-a-half story real ell and a frame hyphen between the house and kitchen. Annfield was listed on the National Register in 1969.

Primary Resource Information: Bridge, Stories 0.00, Style: No Discernable Style, 1930

March 2012: Constructed in 1930, the bridge is a single-span reinforced steel girder bridge with concrete deck and stone abutments. The steel was forged by the Virginia Bridge and Iron Company of Roanoke, Virginia as is confirmed by a plaque. According to earlier surveys, a bridge like this one was here in ca. 1910, but most of that has been replaced. The concrete deck was constructed ca. 2012 and the formed concrete abutment walls have a date of 1952. An earlier bridge would have been here when the railroad came through in ca. 1880.

March 2012: Constructed ca. 1900, this two-story, four-bay, vernacular frame I-house with standing-seam metal gabled roof and a central-front gable is clad in aluminum siding. A standing-seam metal hip roofed screened-in porch has a perma-stone half-wall. A two-story ell extends off of the rear with a shed roof addition on either side. Architectural details include gable-end returns, a pointed-arched attic window in the central-front gable, a central brick flue, two-over-two sash windows, some new one-over-one windows. The house is asymmetrical and the window spacings are uneven, suggesting it could perhaps originally have been the right two bays and was added onto and achieved its current configuration in the early 1910s. The solid foundation is not clearly visible.

March 2012: Constructed ca. 1834, Christ Episcopal Church has had several additions and was rebuilt after a 1947 fire. The one story, three-bay random-rubble stone church has a gable end roof fronted by a square bell tower with entry that is flanked by steeply-pitched shed-roofed one-story wings. Stone buttresses are located on each side of the front end wall. The one-bay, three-story, square tower with a flat roof has Gothic-arched louvered windows in the third-story belfry, and Gothic-arched double-leaf vertical board door on the first floor topped by a recessed panel with an applied cross. The four-bay sanctuary has large lancet windows topped by plain recessed panels. The rear elevation features a large pointed-arched window behind the altar. Other details include gable-end returns, an interior stone chimney, a stone foundation, and a one-story, two-bay, gable-roofed side/rear stone wing with paired windows.

March 2012: Constructed ca. 1870, this two-story, three-bay, vernacular I-house with side-gable roof sits on a random-rubble stone foundation, is clad in weatherboard, and is covered with a standing-seam metal roof with two interior brick flues. The windows are two-over-two sash on the first floor and six-over-six on the second floor; most have louvered shutters. Other architectural details of this original section are a plain friezeboard, gable-end returns, and a two-light transom and sidelights around the front door. A three-bay, hipped roof, front porch runs nearly the length of the façade; it is decorated with lace-like brackets, a flat jigsaw cut balustrade, and square posts. To the south of the original section and set back to the east, is a two-story, three-bay, side-gable addition. This ca. 1882 section with one-story protruding bay, two-light transom over the center door and two-over-two sash windows throughout is on a stone foundation, clad in weatherboard, and covered with a standing-seam metal roof. An enclosed shed roof porch extends off of the rear of this south section. Architectural details in the south section include louvered shutters, gable-end returns, and an interior brick flue. A two-story, three-bay deep and one-bay wide frame gable-end wing with a stone foundation and weatherboard siding extends off of the rear of the original section and was added in the 1880s or 1890s. The two earlier sections of the house appear to be better constructed than the third section.

March 2012: This two story, three-bay vernacular frame I-house with a side-gabled roof was constructed ca. 1880. The façade is brick veneered, the remaining elevations are a mix of vinyl siding (south elevation and rear addition) and wood clapboard (east and north elevations). The house is laid on a parged foundation and has a standing-seam metal roof. A two-flue brick exterior-end chimney is on the north end. The one-bay front portico with two Tuscan columns support a denticulated cornice and pediment. A screened-in side porch with square posts has an upper porch balustrade. The six-over-six sash wood windows have louvered shutters on all but the east elevation. The one-bay rear addition has a low-pitched gable roof covered in asphalt shingle. Architectural details include: a modillion cornice on the façade, boxed cornice returns, a circular cement medallion above the front portico, and louvered vents in the gables. The current owner says the building, originally a toll house, was moved back from the road in 1920.

March 2012: Constructed ca. 1870, the Little Red Schoolhouse is a one-story, seven-bay frame structure. The Schoolhouse has many additions, but it is possible to read the evolution of the structure. The original structure was a T-plan with a projecting center front-gable, five-bays, rubble stone foundation, exterior-end brick chimney, German-lap siding, and a standing-seam metal roof. A square cupola with two louvered shutters and a steeply-sloped metal roof with flared eaves dominate the roofline. Windows in this early section are four-over-four sash and have no shutters. The four-bay recessed entrance is comprised of two, six-paneled wood doors with transoms with rectangular tracery, and a Colonial Revival-style door surround with fluted pilasters. The doors are flanked by tall and narrow two-over-two sash wood windows. Later, the gable-end façade was extended west toward the road with a pedimented porch and two, two-bay parapeted, shed-roofed units were added on both sides of the porch. Other porch details include: a set of brick steps running the length of the porch, square columns, two pilasters, and a semi-circular louvered vent in the porch pediment. This later addition has shiplap siding, a standing-seam metal roof, but is built on a painted concrete block foundation. Additionally, the windows in this section are two-over-two sash and have louvered shutters. A parapeted, shed roofed, four-bay addition extends off the rear and another shed roof addition extends of the south side.

March 2012: Constructed ca. 1880, this two-story, three-bay, vernacular log dwelling has bricktex siding, a stone foundation, and a gabled standing-seam metal roof with two interior-end brick chimneys. Details include 6/6-sash double-hung wood windows, 4-light attic windows in the gable ends, a molded wood cornice, and a one-story, four-bay, shed-roofed front porch with square posts and concrete piers foundation. Some of the logs are visible on the se corner and show that the chinking was whitewashed. A small one-story, gable-end bay on the south end probably covers the basement entry. It has been vacant for several years and is threatened by neglect.

March 2012: The south three bays of this vernacular dwelling were constructed ca. 1850 and are of log construction on a stone foundation. The gable-roofed, stuccoed house was Victorianized during the late 19th century when it was perhaps raised to a full two stories and reroofed along with a central-front gable with round-arched 6-light attic window. A two-story, one-bay side wing was also bringing the house to its current configuration. Architectural details include a modern exterior-end brick chimney, two four-light attic windows in the gable ends, an interior brick chimney with corbelled cap, 6/6-sash wood windows, modern casement windows on the south end first floor, overhanging eaves and gable-end returns, a plain friezeboard and a one-bay front porch with square columns. A two-story, two-level four-bay, shed-roofed rear porch has square posts and a plain balustrade. The northernmost bay of the rear porch is enclosed.

March 2012: Constructed ca. 1860, the two-story, three-bay, gable-roofed, Italianate-style, frame (with brick noggin) house is clad in bricktex and rests on a stone foundation. It is in fair condition. The standing-seam metal roof has two large central-interior brick chimneys with corbelled caps, gable-end returns, and overhanging eaves. The projecting, gabled, rectangular, central bay has a semicircular window in the gable end and a tripartite window on the second floor. The wooden windows are paired 4/4-sash with aluminum storms and are almost full height on the first floor. The house has a plain frieze and overhanging eaves that once contained brackets as is evidenced in the front gable end of the projecting bay. The hip-roofed, wraparound, front porch has Craftsman-like supports comprised of battered posts on brick piers and a concrete and brick foundation and is not original. A 1 ½-story gable-roofed wing with side lean tos, the southern one of which contains a two-bay integral porch, is attached to the rear of the house and features double-hung 6/6- and 3/3-sash wood windows.

Chapel Hill Lane

*300 Chapel Hill Lane 021-0014 Chapel Hill Other DHR Id #: 021-5025-0073

Primary Resource Information: Single Dwelling, Stories 2.00, Style: Federal/Adamesque, 1820

March 2012: The house is a long stone dwelling composed of several distinct parts that were built during the 19th and 20th centuries. The original mid-1820s Federal-style portion of Chapel Hill includes the central section as well the southernmost end of the house. The southernmost end of Chapel Hill was originally constructed as a separate outbuilding and was probably built first. The vernacular, gable-roofed, limestone building contains two interior-end brick chimneys and originally had two front doors. It was remodeled in 1939 into a subsidiary residence and was connected to the rest of the main house in 1947. The two-story, six-bay central portion of Chapel Hill is made up of two, three-bay, side-passage sections of varying height, each with an interior-end brick chimney. Each of these random-rubble limestone, gable-roofed blocks has its own entrance door topped by a one-bay pedimented portico. The architectural evidence supports the theory that the two sections were built independently of each other yet within a short time span as they share the same Federal-style interior treatment. The more diminutive wing to the north appears to have been constructed first as it contains the only stair and the Federal-style woodwork is more vernacular in nature than that in the south section. Chapel Hill was remodeled and enlarged in 1941 after plans drawn up by George L. Howe, a Washington, DC architect. His notes indicate that he generally called for the removal of original fabric but often had it replaced with matching new material or reapplied. The exterior plaster was removed to expose the stonework, which was then repointed. The metal roof was replaced with slate shingles. The windows were removed and replaced with "new sash, frames, and trim in the present openings." The first-floor double-hung windows of both sections are 9/9-sash, the second-floor windows of the taller of the two sections are 9/6-sash, and the second-floor windows of the more diminutive section are 6/6-sash. The eaves are boxed with a denticulated wooden cornice. Each section has one interior-end brick chimney with corbeled cap projecting from the exterior gable-end. Square four-light attic windows are located in the gable ends where the chimneys are located. The building's form and elevations illustrate a vernacular Federal style typical of local buildings of this era. Both of the front entrances into the house are sheltered by one-bay pedimented porticos supported by Tuscan columns. The raked cornices and the horizontal cornice are decorated with a guilloche pattern trim while the architrave and raked sides of the tympanum are adorned with Federal-style fretwork. The brick decks are approached by stone steps on both porticos and were added during the 1941 alterations. The entrance door into the taller south section is four-paneled and is topped by a four-light transom. The entrance into the shorter section leads into the main stair hall and is the current main entrance. The six-paneled door is topped by a three-light transom. The rear elevations of these sections were altered somewhat in 1941 and again during the recent rehabilitation work. The taller wing to the south has an elaborate entrance door with fanlight and sidelights. There was originally an opening here sheltered by a pedimented portico, but it was enlarged to accommodate sidelights and a fanlight in 1941 and the portico was removed. The present owner installed the current round-arched hood in order to create a water break to protect the door and lights. The shorter of the two sections has two-story rear porches that were also part of the 1941 design and were repaired during the recent rehabilitation. The first-floor porch is enclosed with glass panels that can be removed to create a screened in porch. The second-floor three-bay porch has simple square posts and a Chippendale-style wooden railing. The house was rehabilitated ca. 2000 by the current owners.

February 2012: The original section of this two-story, five-bay gable-roofed, stuccoed vernacular dwelling is comprised of the right three bays, which are of stone construction. This section of the house appears to have been constructed ca. 1780 and had a side passage plan with an interior-end stuccoed chimney. The front door contains a three-light transom and is fronted by a one-bay, hip-roofed, front porch with Tuscan columns. The two-story, two-bay wing to the left was constructed sometime during the 19th century, creating a center-passage plan and giving the house symmetry. The present owners, who moved here in the early 1970s, restored the house and had to reconstruct part of the walls in the later wing. They also added a two-story, two-bay side wing that is recessed from the front and extends to the rear. All the windows in the historic portion of the house have six-over-six-sash wood windows, louvered wooden shutters, stone foundations, and standing-seam metal roofs.

February 2012: This one-story, four-bay, asymmetrical vernacular frame dwelling was constructed ca. 1935. It may have been moved to this site at that time from another location. It rests on a parged concrete foundation, has stucco siding, and a standing-seam metal gable roof. The four-bay integral front porch is full width and has square wooden posts as supports and a wooden floor. Details include overhanging eaves, modern vinyl 6/6-sash windows, painted lintels, a large interior parged chimney with multiple flues, a gabled bulkhead basement entry on the south side, and a full-width rear one-story shed-roofed wing.

February 2012: The two-story, five-bay, gable-roofed, front section of Huntingdon was constructed ca. 1830. Resting on a stone foundation with a side gabled roof covered in slate shingles with two interior-end brick chimneys, the exterior stone walls are laid in random-rubble with stone corner quoins and are topped by a wooden cornice. The fenestration is comprised of 6/9-sash, second-story and 9/9-sash first-story, double-hung wood windows topped by stone jack arches and flanked by louvered wooden shutters. Small basement windows with wooden bars are evident on the front elevation and rectangular attic windows with similar horizontal bars are also found in the gable ends. The central entrance is marked by a one-story, one-bay pedimented portico supported by Tuscan columns that shelters the double-leaf front door topped by a rectangular transom with sunburst tracery. A two-story, three-bay, hip-roofed, stone rear wing was added ca. 1850 giving the house a T-shape. This section features an interior- brick chimney, a standing-seam metal roof, similar windows as the front section, and a three-bay, hip-roofed porch on the west side. During the early 20th century a one-story porch along the east side of the ell was enclosed, creating a shed-roofed two-story service wing with 6/6-sash and 2/2-sash windows and weatherboard siding. The house is in excellent condition.

April 2012: Constructed ca. 1910, this one-and-a-half-story, multi-bay, eclectic stuccoed dwelling was built as stables. After the main house burned ca. 2009, these Queen Anne-style stables were remodeled and the building converted into the main dwelling on the property. The upper story of the stable had been used as a residence, probably originally by groomsmen, and later by tenants. An octagonal three-story entrance tower with curved conical roof dominates the façade. It features a two-panel door on the first floor, paired 4-light casement on the second floor, and blind round-arches on the third floor. On the east side of the tower is a gable-roofed (asphalt shingle) two-bay wing with two hip-roofed dormers. The part of the building on the west side of the tower features a gambrel-end roof with side shed and hipped dormers. . The second floor of this section, which contains a tripartite segmental-headed window, overhangs the first floor section. Other architectural details include wide-overhanging eaves, banked six-over-six-sash wood and vinyl windows, modern French doors. March 2012: Constructed ca. 1834, this two-story, three-bay, side-passage-plan, frame dwelling rests on a limestone foundation and is an example of a transitional Federal-style with some Greek Revival-style detailing. The house is clad in weatherboard siding and the gabled roof in standing-seam metal with two large interior brick chimneys and a boxed wooden cornice. The double-hung windows have 9/6-sash on the first floor and 6/6-sash on the second floor, with operating louvered wooden shutters. Two four-light attic windows are located in the west gable end and basement windows are evident along the west side of the foundation. The house faces south and is marked by a one-bay, hip-roofed entrance portico with paired Tuscan columns and Doric pilasters that shelters the main entrance. The solid 4-panel front door is topped by a fanlight with a sunburst pattern and sidelights with tracery in a circular pattern. The surrounding trim is symmetrically molded with plain corner blocks. A seven-bay porch with Tuscan columns runs along the west side of the house and is connected to the front portico by a small deck. Large 6/6-sash windows with jib doors beneath open up onto the side porch. The house features a two-story, gable-roofed frame ell with exterior-end brick chimney and 6/6-sash windows. The roof line of the ell is lower than the main house and indicates its utilitarian use. March 2012: The center five-bay portion of this rambling, 2 ½-story, Federal-style, stone dwelling is the original section, constructed ca. 1825. Resting on a stone foundation, the standing-seam metal gabled roof contains interior-end brick chimneys and five gabled dormers that were added. The three-bay, 1 ½-story stone wing to the north was added in the 1930s. The three-bay, 1 ½-story south wing was added in 1976 and the one-story stone wing off of it was added ca. 2010. The wood windows on the main block are 4/4-sash on the first floor and 6/9-sash on the second floor. The three-bay front porch has Tuscan columns as supports. A one-story three-bay, enclosed, conservatory-type porch is found on the rear elevation. It is believed that the house originally faced east.

April 2012: The original part of this vernacular dwelling is the one-story, three-bay, frame section on a raised stone foundation that was constructed ca. 1875. Originally two stories in height and L-shaped, the second floor was removed and the rear portion demolished ca. 1965. It has weatherboard siding, a standing-seam metal roof with two interior end chimneys (one is brick and the other is parged), a front door with a three-light transom and sidelights, and a front stoop with basement access below it. One-over-one-sash vinyl windows are throughout except for six-over-one-sash wood windows in the basement. A one-story hyphen and a two-story, three-bay addition extend off of the west of the original section and a shed-roofed porch extends off of the rear. A two-story wing was added ca. 1900. It contains a large stone chimney, a standing-seam metal gabled roof, and rests on a stone foundation.

March 2012: Constructed ca. 1875, this one-story, one-bay, gable-end, former public school is now used as a thrift store for the local charitable organization FISH. The vernacular frame building has a stone foundation, German-lap siding, an exterior-front brick chimney, a standing-seam metal roof, 2/2-sash and 6/6-sash double-hung wooden windows, gable-end returns a stone front stoop with a pipe railing sheltered by a metal awning, and a rear concrete stoop. A full-sixe 2/2-sash, wooden attic window is located in the front gable end. The south side of the building shows evidence of a bank of full-height windows that were probably original. It appears the building was remodeled after it closed as a public school in the early 1940s. A one-story lean-to wing extends to the north.

Primary Resource Information: Single Dwelling, Stories 1.50, Style: Colonial, 1756

April 2012: Clermont is a 1 ½-story, sprawling vernacular frame and stone dwelling that is made up of multiple parts constructed over a 214-year period. The earliest section is the 1 ½-story, three-bay, gable-roofed section to the east. It is of timber frame with brick nogging construction and, as confirmed by dendrochronology conducted in 2010, was constructed in 1756. Clad in wide, beveled wood siding, the house features two gabled dormers on the north side and three on the south side, each with 6/6-sash wood windows. The other windows are 9/9-sash double-hungs. The front door is topped by a three-light transom and is protected by a three-bay, hip-roofed front porch with modern square posts and Tuscan pilasters against the back wall. The south side features a four-bay, shed-roofed, screened-in front porch with Tuscan columns on wooden piers. It ties into four additional bays of a porch that front the west frame section and terminated with a one-bay enclosed room. An exterior-end brick chimney is located at the east end of the original section of the house and a stone one with a brick stack with blind brick panels is located on the west end. This chimney also serves the one-story, three-bay, timber-framed with brick-nogging, gable-roofed section to west that was constructed in1788. This 1788 section is connected to a perpendicular two-story gable-roofed stone addition that was made to the house in 1835/36 by a frame two-story section that was constructed in 1970. Before that time, these sections of the house were unattached. The one-story four-bay wing west of the stone section was originally two bays wide and is of timber-frame with brick nogging construction and was built in 1777 and expanded in 1833. It was freestanding until 1949 when it was attached to the stone wing by a small hyphen.

March 2012: Constructed ca. 1794, this 2 ½-story, five-bay, random-rubble limestone, Federal-style dwelling rests on a stone foundation and features a 1 ½-story, four-bay, side stone wing attached to the east end of the main block by an enclosed frame breezeway. The gabled roof of the main block is covered in slate shingles and features two interior-end brick chimneys with corbelled stacks, and three gable-roofed dormers on both the front and rear elevations. An elegant denticulated wooden cornice supports the boxed wooden eaves and stone quoins are suggested at the corners of the house. The double-hung wood windows are 6/9-sash and feature wooden sills and louvered wooden shutters. The one-bay pedimented front porch on the north elevation has Tuscan columns and protects the paneled door that is topped by a 4-light transom. A three-bay, shed-roofed screened porch runs along the rear (south) elevation. The side wing has three gabled dormers with 6-light attic windows, 16x16 casement wood windows, and 6/6-sash double-hung windows. An exterior wooden stair leads to a door in the east gable end. A central brick chimney marks where the original, ca. 1900, part of the stone wing ended. It was extended to its current configuration ca. 1925. It is believed that the house originally faced south.

February 2012: The current front, two-story, three-bay, gable-roofed section of this dwelling was added ca. 1900 and features Victorian detailing in the use of a central-front gable, gable-end returns, and two-bay front porch with chamfered posts and sawn pendants. The rear portion of the house is comprised of a one-story, one-bay stone wing with an interior-end stone chimney that was probably constructed ca. 1810. It is attached to the front of the house by a two-story ell with a central brick chimney. All sections include stone foundations and standing-seam metal roofing. Alterations to the house include vinyl siding, one-over-one-sash vinyl windows with vinyl shutters, and a modern two-story wing to the north. Parts of the house are of log construction, although concealed behind the siding.

February 2012: Constructed in 1877, this 1 ½-story, three-bay frame dwelling exhibits design elements of the Gothic Revival style in its steeply pitched center front gable and two front gabled dormers. The roof is a clipped gable and is covered in standing-seam metal, and the frame walls are covered in German lap siding. The wooden windows are 2/2-sash with the ones on the first floor being full height. The windows have ramped pediments and most have louvered shutters. The 13-bay front porch with Tuscan columns and a pier foundation, wraps around the front and both sides of the house. The side elevations feature double-leaf doors with diamond-shaped panes that lead out onto the roof of the porch, which has a balustrade in that area. A one-bay pedimented porte cochere projects at the enter entrance bay. The front double-leaf door has a two-light transom and round-arched glass in the doors. The house has several interior brick chimneys. A 1 ½-story frame gable-roofed wing extends to the rear and features similar detailing as the front block. Further to the north is a 1 ½-story frame wing that was constructed as a separate building and later connected to the main house with a one-story hyphen. It features a gabled roof of standing-seam metal, gabled dormers, two-over-two–sash windows, a brick and stone foundation, an interior-end brick chimney, and an enclosed porch on the north end.

February 2012: The ca. 1784, stone Pagebrook house has been demolished. The present one-story, two-three-bay, gable-roofed, vernacular frame building was a detached kitchen wing to the main house. It appears to date to ca. 1920. The building faces east and the surveyor was only able to view it from the north and west because of dogs in the yard. It rests on a stone and concrete foundation. The walls are covered in German-lap siding and a seam suggests it was constructed in two sections. The gabled roof is covered in v-crimp metal and has overhanging eaves. The six-over-six-sash windows appear to be modern wooden replacements and are difficult to see because of cloth awnings hanging over them on the west side. Entrance to the building is now through a side lean-to enclosed porch on the east side. Other details include gable-end returns, and a large, rectangular, louvered attic vent in the north gable end.

March 2012: This two-story, five-bay frame dwelling was constructed ca. 1900 and features two front doors. The house rests on a stone foundation and the frame walls are covered in bricktex siding. The gabled roof is clad in standing-seam metal and the placement of an interior flue and an exterior-end flue along with the fact it has two doors, suggest that the left three bays may have been constructed first and then enlarged with the two bays to the right at a later time (ca. 1920). Another unusual feature is that the house has only three bays of openings on the second floor-- not all of which line up with first-floor openings. Architectural details include 6/6-sash wood windows batten shutters and a four-bay front porch with turned posts and plain balusters. A one-story, full-width, shed-roofed wing extends along the rear along with an addition one-bay shed-roofed wing.

March 2012: This is a two-story, four-bay vernacular dwelling with a gabled asphalt-shingle roof. The three southernmost bays may be log ca. 1880, expanded ca. 1910 to two stories with a one-bay frame addition to the north. The exterior is stucco, the eaves show exposed purlin ends, and the windows are 6/6 wooden sashes. The house has an interior central chimney that was probably originally an exterior end chimney serving the log house. A stone foundation is found beneath the log section, while formed concrete supports the north frame section. The west elevation has a four-bay wraparound porch with turned spindles and an enclosed portion on the south side. A two-story ell is attached to the east side and one-story wing is attached to the north side.

March 2012: This vernacular two-story, three-bay log house with v-notched corners was constructed ca. 1840. The logs are exposed on the exterior of the first floor facade, but covered in cedar shakes on the exterior of the second floor to the roofline. The first-floor level of the gable ends and the south elevation is clad in vertical-board siding. The façade windows are 6/6 double-hung wooden sashes, and there are modern 1/1 windows in aluminum frames on the remaining elevations. The house rests on a stone foundation. The roof is gabled, clad in v-crimp metal with a modern rebuilt exterior-end stone chimney on the west end. The three-bay hip-roofed front porch has turned supports. The east side has an attached two-story lean-to wing of modern construction clad in T-111. There are several gable-roofed wings and an open deck on the south side of the house; the southernmost pen is a machine shed/garage used to store equipment.

March 2012: This two-story, three-bay, frame vernacular I-house rests on a stone foundation and was constructed ca. 1895. The walls are clad in stucco and the gabled roof in standing-seam metal. An exterior-end brick chimney is located in the south gable end of the front section, and another near the joint between the front section and the rear ell. Other architectural details include overhanging eaves, gable-end returns, a plain frieze board, 6/6-sash double-hung wood windows with louvered shutters, and square attic windows in the gable ends. The main entrance is a central door with three-light sidelights, sheltered beneath a gable-roofed one-bay front porch with square posts and false half-timbering details. The west two-story ell appears to have been constructed at the same time and has identical architectural detailing. The west elevation has a two-story porch; the upper level has been enclosed. The one and a half-story, three-bay south wing has exposed log framing, a gable roof clad in standing-seam metal, and a large exterior-end brick chimney on the south side. The wing has 6/6-sash windows, a central door with 9-panel light, two front gable roofed dormers, and two unusual polygonal bay dormers on the rear roof slope. The log wing was added to the main house in the early 1940s. The logs came from a free-standing cabin that was originally sited on the property. The one-story, two-bay, gable-roofed side frame wing that extends to the north was constructed ca. 2010.

February 2012: The central two-story, five-bay, portion of this stuccoed stone house was constructed ca. 1819. The front of the gable-roofed house originally faced south and was fronted by a one-story porch. The rear (north of the house) now acts as the main entry and has a perpendicular, two-story, gable-roofed, stuccoed wing that appears to have been the original detached kitchen. The house rests on a stone foundation and features 9/6- and 6/6-sash double-hung wood windows with louvered wooden shutters, two interior-end brick chimneys, three gabled dormers with 6/6-sash windows, a Federal-style door surround consisting of Doric pilasters supporting a plain entablature with a denticulated cornice, a rectangular transom with sunburst tracery; and a modern stone patio with metal railing. The current front has a central door fronted by a one-bay pedimented portico supported by Tuscan columns. The two two-bay side wings are set back from the original and were added in the mid-1940s and originally had sleeping porches on the second floor that have since been enclosed. The curving one-story rear breezeway attaching the house to a former garage was also constructed at this time. The house is in excellent condition.

April 2012: Constructed ca. 1790, this two-story, three-bay vernacular dwelling has a stucco finish, standing-seam metal roof, exterior-end random rubble stone and brick chimneys and was constructed in several stages. The northern two-bay section is the oldest section. A two-bay section was added to the south of the original section in the early 1800s. The final southern three-bay wing with exterior random rubble stone chimney was added ca. 1830s. A one-story, hip-roofed, seven-bay front porch with Tuscan columns and a brick floor spans all three sections. The house has recently been renovated and has six-over-six-sash vinyl windows, paneled shutters, and a gabled standing-seam metal roof with gable-end returns. A one-story, shed-roofed porch with three bays and four Tuscan columns extends off of the rear as does a one-story, shed-roofed, log-cabin addition with deck. A shed-roofed hyphen with lattice siding connects the main house to a gable-end summer kitchen with a random rubble stone basement foundation, stucco finish, and standing-seam metal roof with two, four-light windows in the gable-ends. A two-story, shed-roofed addition with a basement and first floor porch, second story clad in Hardi-plank, and interior brick chimney extends off of the south end of the summer kitchen.

March 2012: According to written documentation, the 1793 house that once stood here burned in 1932 and the current building was constructed on the site. Historic photographs show a very similar building that was two stories tall with a front gable, two-story side wings, and a front portico. The current building has a similar configuration, but is stuccoed and does not have the one-story, flat-roofed front portico. It is unclear how much of the house burned, or whether the current building is entirely new construction. A review of Waterman's 1935 drawings at the Library of Congress may reveal further information. Currently, the center three-bay portion features a double-leaf door flanked by 9/9-sash double-hung wood windows, and three bays of 6/6-sash windows on the second floor, all with louvered shutters. A louvered lunette attic window is located in the front gable end that features ship-lap wood siding. The side two-story, one-bay, wings feature 6/6-sash windows, side gable roofs and semi-exterior-end stuccoed chimneys. All the roofs are covered in slate shingles. Two-story wings extend to the south and are modern yet fit in with the character of the house. They include multiple chimneys, garage bays on the first floor and second-story porches on the rear elevation supported by large stone posts.
