ABSTRACT

On behalf of the Historic Preservation Office of the South Dakota State Historical Society, The Louis Berger Group, Inc. [Berger] completed an architectural survey of Beadle County, South Dakota. The goal of the project was to gain an understanding of the nature of architectural resources of the county through a reconnaissance level survey.

The project included the survey of over 3,900 properties throughout the county. Surveyed properties included farmsteads and many abandoned early and mid-twentieth century dwellings. There were commercial and religious buildings in the county's towns. Cemeteries were found in both urban and rural settings. The integrity of these properties varied widely, and many have been altered over time through the installation of synthetic siding and replacement windows, and large additions. This survey provides an architectural overview of the county and identifies potentially significant properties.

I. INTRODUCTION

This report presents the results of a reconnaissance level architectural survey conducted by The Louis Berger Group, Inc. for the State Historical Society of South Dakota in Pierre, South Dakota. The goal of the project was to gain an understanding of the architectural resources of the county through a windshield survey.

This survey meets the specifications of the Secretary of the Interior's Standards and Guidelines for Historic Preservation. The project Architectural Historians Camilla Deiber, Patti Kuhn, and Mike Yengling meet or exceed the qualifications described in the Secretary of the Interior's Professional Qualifications Standards. The survey was conducted following the guidelines outlined in the South Dakota Historical Resource Survey Manual.

Berger received the Notice to Proceed on May 22, 2007 from the Historic Preservation Office of the State Historical Society of South Dakota. The fieldwork was divided into two phases, one in the fall of 2007 and one in the spring of 2008. Berger Architectural Historian Camilla Deiber collected background information on the project and met with project coordinator Jason Haug on September 11, 2007. Berger Architectural Historians Camilla Deiber, Mike Yengling, and Patti Kuhn collected survey data in the fall and spring fieldwork phases. A public meeting was held on September 12, 2007 at the Huron City Hall in Huron, South Dakota, at which Berger Architectural Historian Camilla Deiber, project coordinator Jason Haug and members of the Huron Historic Preservation Commission were in attendance. The reconnaissance survey effort was conducted in September 2007; and March and June of 2008.

II. SURVEY METHODOLOGY

A. PROJECT BACKGROUND

Beadle County is located in east central South Dakota and is bounded by Spink County and Clark County on the northeast, Kingsbury County on the east, Sanborn County on the south, and Hand County on the west. The county consists of 35 townships and is 1260 square miles. The James River runs north to south, bisecting the eastern half of the county. The river and its tributaries, Shue, Cain, and Pearl Creeks, serve as the major water sources in the county. Lake Byron, situated in the northeast section of the county, serves as a recreational area. Huron, located nearly in the center of the county, is the largest city in Beadle County with a population of 11,800 and serves as the County Seat. Other incorporated towns in the county include Cavour, Iroquois (partially in Kingsbury County), Virgil, Wolsey, Broadland, Bonilla, and Hitchcock. These towns are substantially smaller than Huron with less than five hundred residents each.

B. SURVEY METHODOLOGY

During the windshield survey, Berger traveled every public right-of-way within the county and each property that was visible from the road that met the National Register minimum criteria for age was inventoried.

While in the field, surveyors entered information on each property into the Preservation Office's historic sites database system. Information was then transferred to the Office's online Historic Sites Survey form. All properties were recorded with digital photography, and those that are potentially eligible were documented with sketch site plans.

C. BACKGROUND RESEARCH

Prior to beginning fieldwork, National Register nominations, multiple property documentation forms, historic contexts, and survey files were reviewed and collected at the State Historic Preservation Office. Historic map research and additional historical research was also undertaken at the South Dakota State Archives and State Library, and at the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C.

Three hundred and eighty three (383) properties had been previously surveyed prior to the commencement of this survey (Table 1). This number included seventeen archaeological sites. The remainder of the properties consisted of buildings and structures throughout the county. Much of the downtown area of Huron has been previously surveyed (BE002)(see Table 1). A large portion of Wolsey's commercial (BE003) and residential (BE004) sections have also been previously surveyed (see Table 1).

Ten individual properties in Beadle County have been previously listed in the National Register of Historic Places (NRHP): Anderson Barn, Bowdon, Faye House, Chicago and North Western Roundhouse, Dairy Building, Hattie O. and Henry Drake Octagon House, Grace Episcopal Church, Margaret and Vernon Maxon House, McMonies Barn, Albert S. Piper Claim Shanty, and the Pyle House. One historic district, the Campbell Park Historic District in Huron (BE001), has been listed in the NRHP (see Table 1). Two Hutterite colonies, the Old Riverside Colony and the Milford Colony, have been listed in the NRHP as part of a Multiple Property Documentation of Historic Hutterite Colonies.

III. HISTORICAL CONTEXT

A. EARLY SETTLEMENT

1. Dakota Territory

Development of what now comprises South Dakota was delayed compared to other areas of the Midwest in the mid nineteenth century mostly due to its geographic location. Little interest was held in the Great Plains during this time period as other more desirable lands were still readily available. In addition, the federal government failed to secure title to the majority of land in South Dakota that continued to be occupied by the American Indians. This changed in 1859, when eastern South Dakota was opened to settlement; however, railroads had yet to service this area which made farming and other development impractical. At the end of the Civil War, interest in the frontier increased as a feeling of security from the Indians increased due to the establishment of a number of military forts scattered across the Great Plains. Further propelling the settlement of the Great Plains was the 1862 Homestead Act and the expansion of the railroads, stimulated by government-backed land grants and funding (McClaskey 1940: 7). As settlement increased, a petition was made for territorial organization and on March 2, 1861, an Act of Congress established the Dakota Territory.

2. Great Dakota Boom

During what is known as the Great Dakota Boom (1878-1887), and unprecedented amount of land was claimed and settled southeast of the Missouri River, in what is now southeastern South Dakota. Between 1870 and 1880, the population of southeastern South Dakota grew from 10,000 to 81,771 and by 1885, the number reached an astounding 248,569 (Schell 2004: 158). Weather and thus farming conditions greatly improved during this time and the swarms of grasshoppers, which had tarnished the reputation of the region only a few years before, were quickly forgotten. In addition, improvements in farm equipment vastly improved the ability to plow through the tough prairie sod (Schell 2004: 159-160).

It was the railroad; however, that was the biggest impetus for the rapid settlement of South Dakota during the late 1870s and 1880s. In 1874, the discovery of gold in the Black Hills of western South Dakota sparked the interest of the railroads and by 1880 the Chicago and North Western Railway (North Western) and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad (Milwaukee) extended service west to the Missouri River (McClaskey 1940: 11). During the Dakota Boom, approximately 2,179 miles of railroad was constructed in South Dakota. By 1888, railroads served all but three of the 45 counties located east of the Missouri River. With the railroads came better building materials and other amenities that greatly improved life on the prairies of Dakota Territory. The railroads aided the immense development not only because they provided inexpensive and reliable service for passengers and goods, but also because the railroad companies played a large role in encouraging settlement and platting towns. (Hamburg 1981: 84-87).

The Railroads brought settlement and the practice of platting towns along the railroad lines, either by the railroad company, their land departments, officials of the railroad, or by their subsidiary townsite companies. Between 1878 and 1887, the railroad companies platted 138 of the 285 existing towns in South Dakota. The remaining towns were platted by private entrepreneurs or groups of settlers. Railroad companies saw platting towns as a business opportunity: railroad towns typically prospered and demands for these town lots resulted in easy profits. In addition, railroad companies had control over the design of the town and could build facilities, roads, depots, and other amenities to suit its needs (Hamburg 1981: 91).

During the interim years of the Dakota Boom, between 1881 and 1885, the railroad companies built 930.03 miles of line in what is now South Dakota. Of the 192 towns platted during these four years, 147 were established along the railroad line. The majority of the lines were constructed in the northeastern section of the state, the longest being the Milwaukee with 128.31 miles north along the valley of the James River, from Mitchell to Aberdeen. The North Western built its railroad parallel to this line from Huron to Ordway, and both companies constructed several shorter extensions. Settlement in proximity to these lines quickly increased and most of the towns were established shortly before or after the construction of the lines (Hamburg 1981: 140). The North Western platted 20 of the 22 towns located along the line. Of these 20, officials of the company, including Albert Keep, Marvin Hughitt, and Charles E. Simmons, platted ten of the towns (Hamburg 1981: 125).

3. Beadle County

The Dakota Territory Legislature established Beadle County in 1879 and the county formally organized in 1880 with the appointment of three county commissioners. The county is named for Brigadier General William Henry Harrison Beadle who served as surveyor-general of Dakota Territory under an 1869 appointment by President Ulysses S. Grant. Beadle County had a population of 1,290 in 1880 and by 1885, the population had risen to 10,318, illustrating the boom in population in Dakota Territory during the 1880s.

The Northwestern and the Milwaukee both built lines through Beadle County during the Dakota Boom. By 1881, the North Western established two main routes through Huron: The Volga to Pierre line and the Huron to Orday line. In Beadle County, the Volga to Pierre stopped through Iroquois, Cavour, Huron, Wosley, and Wessington and the Huron to Orday stopped in Huron, Broadland, and Hitchcock. The Milwaukee's line from Mitchell to Aberdeen provided service through Virgil, Wosley, and Bonilla in Beadle County. The Milwaukee established this line by 1881.

Platted in 1879, the first town in Beadle County was Cavour. According to A History of the Origins of the Place Names Connected with the Chicago and North Western and Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Omaha Railways (Stennett 1908), Cavour is named for Camillo Benso, conte di Cavour (August 10, 1810 – June 7, 1861), for his contribution as the "real father of the railroads in Italy" (Stennett 1908:53). The town was officially platted on September 30, 1879 by Marvin Hughitt, General Manager of the North Western (1870-1887).[1] Shortly thereafter, Albert

1 According to Stennett, the town was laid out by the Western Town Lot Company in 1880 (Stennett 1908:53).

Keep, president of the North Western (1877-1887) platted Iroquois (May 12, 1880), Broadland (June 9, 1880), and Hitchcock (June 15, 1880).

The largest town in Beadle County, Huron, was also established by the North Western. In September 1879, the company provided the United States Land Office with the necessary paperwork to establish the town. On May 6, 1880, Albert Keep platted the initial eleven blocks, bounded by First and Third Streets and Ohio and Iowa Streets (Campbell 1883:7, Hamburg 1981: 421). Marvin Hughitt, General Manager of the North Western, reportedly named the town Huron after a tribe of the Sioux. Twelve additional blocks were added in the fall of 1880. 1882 brought several additions to the town: 18 blocks in April, 8 blocks in June, and 18 blocks in August. The final 18 blocks of the North Western's additions created a town of seventy blocks. Speculative developers also capitalized on the railway's initial development and by 1883, 153 non-railroad developed blocks had been platted in Huron, with the newly-published city directory stating, "of which at least [125] have been entirely disposed of by their original owners" (Campbell 1883:7).

Huron was officially incorporated as a town on February 1, 1881, and a post office was established five months later. The Huron Tribune reported on September 1, 1883 that "The first car load of lumber received in Huron this spring arrived about May 15. From that time until September 1 . . . over 200 buildings have been built here making an average of about two per day completed. . ." Before the end of the year, four churches had been built and over fifty businesses were in operation. The North Western had also constructed a depot, a roundhouse, a shop, as well as offices that comprised 38,000 square feet (McClaskey 1940: 18). By 1883, an act of territorial legislature changed the status of Huron to a city and a directory was published listing the population of Huron as 3,783 (Campbell 1883). By 1888, Huron was also served by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway (later the Great Northern Railway), and extension of a line that initially connected Pipestone, Minnesota, to Sioux Falls, and extended to Watertown, South Dakota.

Other towns established in Beadle County by the railroads included Bonilla (March 1884) and Virgil (April 1884), both platted by Charles H. Prior, general superintendent of the Milwaukee (Hamburg 1981: 421-435). Wolsey, located on the North Western and the Milwaukee line, and Wessington, located along the North Western, were not platted by the railroads; however, they also served as stations for the railway. Wessington, located 25 miles west of Huron, was initially designated as Siding No. 2 in 1880 and the town was officially platted in 1882. Wolsey, located between Wessington and Huron on the North Western, was designated Siding No. 1 in 1882 and platted at its present location, one-half-mile east in 1883 (People's History 1986: 18-19).

The United States Federal Census of 1880 organizes Beadle County by residents of Huron, residents of Cavour, and residents living outside of the towns. Approximately thirty-five people were listed as residents of Cavour, which included two saloon keepers, two land agents, and a hotel operator. Residents of Huron in 1880 held a variety of occupations, from saloon keeper, furniture dealer, baker, and a barber to railroad-related positions such as engineer, bridge builder, and railroad contractor. Many of the Beadle County residents living outside of Cavour and Huron consisted of farmers. However, the majority listed in the census were male laborers living in boarding houses, most likely railroad workers. For example, D. C. Hall is listed as "keeping boarders." Along with his wife, who served as the cook, and a 17-year-old waiter, Hall boarded approximately forty male boarders that were laborers, carpenters, and blacksmiths (U.S. Census Records 1880). According to Herbert S. Schell, many settlers found an additional source of income with the railroad, as they "offered the best chance to find work; they were constantly in need of both laborers and teams to build grades and roadbeds" (Schell 2004: 177). Most of the early residents of the county were from other Midwestern states including Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, Iowa, and Illinois. A small number of the residents were immigrants; however, the most prevalent were Irish. According to McClaskey, of the 390 persons of foreign birth in Beadle County in 1880, the largest percentage was Ireland (McClaskey 1940: 34). By 1890; however, Germans comprised the largest percentage with 531 persons of a total of 1,642 foreign-born residents of the county (McClaskey 1940: 36).

4. End of the Dakota Boom and the Beginning of South Dakota Statehood

The Dakota Boom in eastern South Dakota ended in 1887, mainly due to one of the severest droughts in Dakota's history, which lasted from 1886 to the mid-1890s. Conditions were further diminished by the Panic of 1893 that caused an economic decline felt across the country. Bankruptcy was common and an exodus of farmers in South Dakota took place during this time. The decline in settlement is reflected in census records, which indicate that the number of farms increased from 13,598 in 1880 to 46,258 in 1885 and only to 50,158 in 1890. Railroad construction also declined during this time. In 1888, approximately 130 miles were built and in 1889, only 55 miles. It was the first time in ten years that neither the North Western nor the Milwaukee built any new rail lines in the state (Hamburg 1981: 176, 177).

Settlement and construction in Beadle County followed this trend of decline in the latter years of the nineteenth century. By 1890, the population of Beadle County had decreased from a peak in 1885 of 10,318 to 9,586. A firsthand account of the depression describes the conditions:

> The later eighties and nineties witnessed a marked change in conditions. Not only were crops shorter even to partial or total failure, but prices began to decline. . . Under these conditions many gave way to despair. Some, seeing their neighbors sold out under the sheriff's hammer, surrendered their homes needlessly. There seemed nothing on which to base hopes for the future. . . The years 1889 and 1890 were the lowest ebb. Only the more sturdy ones were holding out, and, they because they had no choice" (McClaskey 1940: 21).

The Depression and coinciding drought ruined many farmers in South Dakota and by 1897, many of the counties had half the population they had ten years before (McClaskey 1940: 22).

5. Early Building Traditions in Beadle County

Dwellings constructed in Beadle County during the late nineteenth century were modest, vernacular dwellings; however, they shared similar traditional forms as well as building materials. According to Building South Dakota, "During the homestead era (1860s-1910s) . . .the vast majority of houses built in newly settled areas of South Dakota were vernacular, single-room, rectangular, gable-roofed buildings, including log cabins, long houses, sod houses, dugouts, claim shanties, and simple frame houses copied from pattern books or designed according to regional or ethnic traditions (Erpestad and Wood 1997: 37).

Early histories of Beadle County indicate that early settlers to the county constructed sod houses or modest claim shanties (see NR Nomination for the Piper Claim Shanty). The majority of these temporary folk houses are no longer extant as they were subsequently replaced with more substantial, permanent structures. In some cases, earlier dwellings were later used as farm buildings. With the arrival of the railroad by the 1880s, wood was more readily available and frame construction followed. Thus, the majority of the houses constructed during the latter decades of the nineteenth century in Beadle County are balloon frame construction.

One common vernacular building type is a one or one-and-a-half-story, wood-frame, house with a cubic form. This house form is capped with a steeply-pitched hipped or pyramidal roof. The peak of the roof is flat and is pierced by a brick chimney. Center dormers were not uncommon. Cubic form houses are most frequently found in the rural areas of the county; however, a few examples are also located in the towns.

Gabled-ell houses are also a common vernacular house form found in Beadle County, especially in the rural areas. This house form features two gabled wings set at right angles to each other, which create an L-shaped floor plan. A front porch was often situated at the intersection of the two wings. Gabled-ell houses were either built all at once or initially consisted of a gable-front house with a later adjoining wing. They varied in height from one to two stories, with one-and-a-half-story examples being the most common. Pattern books featured gabled-ell houses making it a readily available vernacular type (Erpestad and Wood 1997: 37-39).

Other common house forms built during the late nineteenth century in Beadle County were the gable front and the hall and parlor. Both are rectangular in form, are typically one to two-stories high, and are capped with a gable roof. A gable-front house, as its name suggests, has the gable end as its main façade while the hall and parlor house has the long wall as the primary elevation. Hall and parlor houses were two rooms wide and often only one room deep.

While the dwellings constructed in the rural sections of the county often featured little to no ornamentation, dwellings constructed in the towns often exhibited more stylistic elements, although incorporating many of the same forms. In Huron, what is now known as the Campbell Park Historic District first developed during the 1880s and 1890s after Huron was platted. This neighborhood is located on two parks, Campbell and Winter, with Dakota Avenue bifurcating the district. Of the thirteen properties dating from the 1880 and 1890s, the majority exude characteristics of the Queen Anne style, which was immensely popular during the last decades of the nineteenth century.

Several religious congregations were also organized in Beadle County during its early years of development. Two of the county's earliest standing churches are located in Cavour. A Methodist church, located on Albert Street, was constructed in the 1880s and sits on a stone foundation.

The building appears to be designed from standard plans for Methodist churches designed by Philadelphia architect Benjamin D. Price. Typical of Price's plans are the L-shaped form of the church, tower located in the intersecting wings, circular and Gothic-arched windows, and pointed-arched window surrounds. St. Patrick's Catholic Church, also currently located on Albert Street, was constructed in 1889. Its name is indicative of the large number of Irish immigrants who settled in Cavour. The modest wood-frame church features a front gable roof with a centered tower and Gothic-arched windows. St. Patrick's also established a cemetery in the county.

Schools built in Beadle County during its early development, in particular outside of the incorporated towns, were one-story, one-room buildings in locations within walking distance for the school children. These wood-frame buildings, typical of rural American schoolhouses in the mid nineteenth century, were mostly modest buildings that were not insulated and only heated by a single coal-burning stove. Rectangular in form, the buildings traditionally had a gable roof with an entrance on the gable end and a row of windows along the long or axial sides, one of which typically faced south to provide for the maximum amount of sunlight (Erpestad and Wood 1997: 82). School buildings were frequently moved within the township as the school-age population shifted. The schools were also often accompanied by a horse barn for those children riding to school (People's History 1986: 20).

B. TURN OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY (1900-1929)

1. The Second Dakota Boom

By the turn of the twentieth century, conditions in eastern South Dakota and across the Great Plains began to improve. Beadle County experienced a series of years with high rainfall, resulting heavy crop yields and overall prosperity. Land values had dropped from an average of $8.05 in 1890 to $4.59 in 1900, but had increased to almost ten times as much in 1900 to $42.39 (McClaskey 1940: 22). The population of Beadle County almost doubled during this ten year period: from 8,081 in 1900 to 15,776 in 1910 (United States Agricultural Census 1910).

The other small communities in Beadle County (3 villages and 5 hamlets according to McClaskey) comprised 10 percent of the county's population in 1930 and ranged in size from 90 persons to 657. The largest growth in these communities took place during 1900-1910 but, began to decline in the 1920s. As McClaskey explains, "Their decline undoubtedly indicates their decreasing importance as serve centers in comparison to Huron as transportation and communication facilities have improved and the rural free delivery has been extended" (McClaskey 1940: 33).

The 1910 agricultural census indicates that 80 to 90 percent of the land area (approximately 800,000 acres) of Beadle County, or approximately 677,700 acres was used as farm land. The number of farms in the county increased by 515 farms to 1,609 (United States Agricultural Census 1910). As the county prospered agriculturally, the federal government encouraged farmers to plant more crops and borrow more money to increase expansion. During World War I, Europe was demanding American agricultural goods, thus increasing the profits and therefore the optimism of American farmers (McClaskey 1940:23). Overproduction; however, caused a surplus in agricultural products and by 1922, prices had collapsed.

On February 9, 1924, the James Valley Bank of Huron, which held a million dollars in deposits and more than a million in loans and discounts, closed. Shortly thereafter, two additional Huron banks closed their doors. The entire county soon felt the effects: between 1924 and 1931, ten banks in Beadle County closed with over seven million dollars in deposits, locates, and discounts (McClaskey 1941: 24).

2. Early Twentieth Century Architecture in Beadle County

A large number of domestic and farm buildings were constructed during this time period due to the county's rapid increase in population. Much of the domestic architecture built during the early years of the twentieth century followed the same patterns as the previous decades; however, several new forms were introduced. In addition, Queen Anne-style ornamentation, although still modest, appeared on several farm houses, illustrating the prosperity of the time period. New forms were also introduced, the most prominent being the American four square and the bungalow. Bungalows were not only popular along the streets of Huron, but a number of farmers also built bungalows in the rural areas of the county.

House construction in Huron increased during the early decades of the twentieth century as its population grew. Houses built around Campbell Park during this time, exhibit characteristics of the Queen Anne style, but also illustrate the shift towards the Colonial Revival style. Approximately 50 percent of the houses within the Campbell Park Historic District were built between 1900 and 1911. Several bungalows permeated the neighborhood in the 1910s and 1920s.

Improvements in farm equipment technology and farming techniques facilitated the construction of new and larger agricultural buildings. In particular, a number of substantial barns were constructed during this time period. The most common barn type is a gable roof barn with a gable-end loft opening and triangular hay hood. Other types include gable roof barns with flanking shed bays (also known as a Midwest Three-Portal Barn). The majority of the barns constructed during this time were wood-frame construction with horizontal siding; however, glazed or vitrified tile was introduced after World War I and was seen as a more sanitary material for barns and silos than wood. One glazed tile barn was surveyed (BE000-00457).

By 1900, the trend toward rectangular schools shifted to one or one-and-a-half-story square-shaped structures. These wood-frame buildings were commonly built from standard plans and had a cube-like appearance with a hipped roof. Often constructed with basements, the building also had an improved heating system such as a jacketed stove that dispersed the heat evenly throughout the room or a basement furnace (Erpestad and Wood 1997: 82). The twentieth century brought changes to the construction of schools as local and state governments began to take a more active role and enforced construction standards. In 1911, the South Dakota Department of Public Instruction began requiring school officials to submit building plans for approval and in 1918, the South Dakota legislature offered financial support for those schools that met certain standards. Rural schools were soon required to have "at least twelve-foot-high ceilings; a minimum of eighteen square feet of floor space per pupil; and approved heating, ventilation, sanitation, and schoolroom equipment" (Erpestad and Wood 1997: 83).

C. THE GREAT DEPRESSION: 1929-1941

South Dakota as a whole was greatly effected by the Great Depression along with the other Great Plains states as the economic hardships were felt even more by the coinciding Dust Bowl years. Although the Dust Bowl was a result of a combination of environmental factors, both the Great Depression and the Dust Bowl caused economic destruction across the Great Plains and in particular, South Dakota.

A series of droughts, beginning in 1921, plagued Beadle County and between 1920 and 1935, only four of the fifteen years produced normal or above average rainfall. Abnormally high temperatures only exacerbated the conditions and resulted in complete crop failures in 1932, 1933, and 1934. Devastating dust storms during 1933 and 1934 only served as a reminder of the destruction caused by years of drought and over-farming. As McClaskey observed in 1940, "The decade beginning in 1930 has undoubtedly witnessed the greatest social adjustments in the history of Beadle County. The first five years of this period have ushered in changes so great that their social cost cannot yet be measured but they are revolutionary in their implications (McClaskey 1940: 25). Foreclosures were common and much of the land in Beadle County transferred from private hands to the state or corporations. The small villages especially suffered during this time period as their populations dropped dramatically. According to McClaskey, "The land boom psychology caused the establishment of too many trade centers and although none of these disappeared during the depression years they lost population and trade units while the city of Huron became increasingly dominant, especially in wholesale trade and service units (McClaskey 1940: 85-86).

Several of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal programs came to the aid of South Dakota's and Beadle County's residents, especially the farmers. By April 1934, 1,918 residents of Beadle County received relief funds from the Emergency Relief Administration and a year later the number rose to 2,374. In January 1935 alone, 2,465 persons in Huron were receiving relief. Between November 1933 and July 1936, the federal government spent over 121 million on various forms of relief for South Dakota, almost 4 million of which was spent on Beadle County. In 1935, the Rural Electrification Agency (REA) provided loans to bring electric power to rural areas across the country. In 1930, 53 percent of Beadle County residents had electricity and 43 percent had telephone service. While 60 percent of all farms in 1930 had telephone service, only 80 of the 2,078 farms had electricity. As of 1935, the REA had not yet affected Beadle County (McClaskey 1940: 42).

In 1935-1936, there were 109 one-room school houses across Beadle County and only one with two rooms. However, during the same school year, eleven of the school houses remained closed due to insufficient funds and lack of school-age children in the area. Terms were often short in the rural schools due to the children being needed at the family farm: in 1920, on average children in rural schools were only in session for 160 days (McClaskey 1940: 198).

D. WORLD WAR II TO PRESENT

The population of South Dakota and Beadle County had fallen during the Depression years and was further diminished during World War II due to the number of servicemen that participated in the war effort overseas. Similar to the rest of the country, the population of South Dakota and Beadle County began to rise in the decades after the war as veterans returned and families expanded during the Baby Boom period. According to the federal census, Beadle County's population rose from 19,648 in 1940 to 21,082 in 1950. However, a trend experienced across South Dakota was the percentage of rural residents moving to urban areas. This percentage of rural residents dropped from 75.4 to 66.9 during the 1940s, and continued to decline to 60.7 percent in 1960 and 55.4 percent in 1970 (Schell 2004: 323). The population of larger towns, such as Huron, grew, while that of smaller towns, such as Cavour, declined. Today, the population of Huron is over 11,000, while the entire population of the county is 17,000: more people live in Huron than the rest of the county.

One of the biggest changes that took place in South Dakota and Beadle County at the end of World War II was the extension of electric lines into many of the rural areas that had not received them when the Rural Electrification Administration (REA) was established in 1935. Two years after the war, only 18 percent of South Dakota farms had electricity; however, by 1950, 69 percent had electric service (Schell 2004: 320).

The Agricultural Census indicates that there were approximately 1,600 farms in Beadle County in 1945 and 1950 (U.S. Agricultural Census 1945, 1950). However, the size and number of farms across the state began to show a trend of fewer farms of larger acreage. "Soldiers returning from the World War II fighting fronts had a hard time finding farms to invest in, because many farmers had bought up land during the period of war-engendered prosperity." Modernization of farm equipment, in particular the combine, greatly changed the way farms operated in the mid twentieth century; however, increased efficiency did not necessarily equate prosperity (Schell 2004: 327).

By the end of World War II, of the 4,000 schools in the state, 85 percent were one-teacher schools. As late as 1961, it was estimated that only 4 percent of 2,000 rural school teachers had earned a four-year college education. In addition, buildings and supplies were inadequate and course offerings limited. The move towards school modernization and reform came at the end of World War II as it was viewed that the great number of small school districts was inefficient. In 1967, the state senate passed a bill requiring all public schools to become part of a 12-year school district within three years. "By the end of 1972, only 233 school districts were left in the state, and one-room country schools were largely a thing of the past" (Schell 2004: 335).

Construction in Beadle County, which had waned during the war years, jumpstarted as a result of the post war economy. Several new subdivisions were added in Huron during the 1950s and illustrate the popular Post War II house type, the Ranch house. Several farmers also built new ranch houses on their farms during this time period.

Railroad closings throughout the state of South Dakota caused hardships for small towns and farmers during the 1980s. The Milwaukee abandoned several thousand miles of track and ended its service to the Pacific Coast (South Dakota Historical Society 2008). The Northwestern also abandoned several of its lines and in particular, the line traveling north from Huron through Broadland and Hitchcock.

South Dakota's rural one-room schools were still in operation into the mid twentieth century; however, by this time a number of the schools had been consolidated and equipped with electricity and running water. Reorganization of the school district in 1971 marked the end of rural schools (People's History 1986: 20). Several new school buildings were constructed during this time period to accommodate the flux of rural school children that were now required to attend school in the county's larger district schools.

E. HUTTERITE COLONIES IN BEADLE COUNTY

Between 1874 and 1879, the religious sect known as the Hutterites immigrated to South Dakota from what is now northern Ukraine and began a communal farming tradition that continues to have a significant presence in Beadle County today. The Hutterites originated in sixteenth century Austria and Moravia and are one of several Anabaptist (believers in adult baptism) sects that emerged during the Protestant Reformation in sixteenth-century Europe. In addition to adult baptism, Hutterite beliefs are based on the principles of the separation of church and state and the opposition of war. However, unlike other Anabaptist groups, the Hutterite religion is strongly based on the idea of "community of goods" – the literal interpretation of the New Testament's principal of the sharing of worldly possessions (Riley 1980:3). It was these beliefs that led to their persecution and later their immigration to the United States.

Between 1874 and 1879 approximately 1300 Hutterites, almost all of those who had been living in northern Ukraine, arrived in Dakota Territory. These families divided into two groups: those who chose to live in communities, and those who chose to settle on private farms. The latter, known as Prairieluet (prairie people), continued to speak their German dialect known as "Hutterisch" but often joined Mennonite and other Protestant congregations. In general, Hutterites were also divided into three distinct congregations, or Leuts, which had their own leader or senior elder, preacher, assembly, and way of handling disputes. While these three groups operated under the same fundamental belief system, each Leut established a separate community in southeast South Dakota during the late nineteenth century. The initial three colonies established in South Dakota were Bon Homme of the Schmiedeluet, Old Wolf Creek Colony of the Dariusleut, and Old Elm Springs of the Lehrerleut (Riley 1980: 4). These initial colonies were located southeast of Beadle County.

During the latter years of the nineteenth century and the early twentieth century, the number of Hutterite Colonies in southeast South Dakota increased due to the growth of the initial families, which led to colony divisions and the establishment of new colonies. During a time of prosperity in Beadle County, onset by favorable farming conditions, Hutterites established three colonies in the county. By 1913, Bon Homme Colony had three "daughter" colonies including Huron Colony in Beadle County. In addition, Old Wolf Creek Colony produced five daughter colonies, one of which was located in Beadle County and was known as Lake Byron Colony. In turn, Lake Byron Colony produced a daughter colony, Milford, in Beadle County. Old Elm Springs Colony produced three daughter colonies, none of which were located in Beadle County. The colonies continued to expand and divide and by 1931, there were 17 Hutterite colonies in South Dakota (Riley et. al 1969: 9).[2]

The Hutterites once again faced persecution during the World War I era due to their German background and, more importantly, their refusal to take part in World War I defense efforts including the buying of war bonds. In 1918, Canadian officials assured the Hutterites that they would receive military exemption. Thus, a number of the colonies migrated north. After the South Dakota legislature voted to deny the Hutterite colonies of their status as a religious corporation and abolished their charters, most of the other colonies emigrated to Canada. By 1934, only Bon Homme Colony remained in South Dakota (Stewart 1981).

The economic hardships brought by the Dust Bowl and the Great Depression years brought an end to the condemnation of the Hutterites as larger problems outweighed their discrimination. In 1935, the state legislature passed the Communal Corporation Act which allowed the colonies to incorporate and receive similar tax benefits to cooperatives. With these new incentives, seven of the colonies, all from the Schmeideluet branch, began returning to South Dakota (Riley 1980: 6).

At the onset of World War II, five Hutterite colonies were located in South Dakota, one of which was the Jamesville Colony that returned from Canada. In 1944, Jamesville re-established Huron Colony on what was formerly Lake Byron Colony. In 1949, Rockport Colony, a daughter colony of Bon Homme, established Riverside Colony on what was originally the location of the initial Huron Colony. The same year, Pearl Creek Colony returned from Canada and settled near Iroquois (Riley 1980: 9).

Huron, Riverside, and Pearl colonies continue to thrive in Beadle County and are agricultural and economic strongholds in the county. While the number of family farms has greatly decreased over the latter decades of the twentieth century and the early twenty-first century in general, the Hutterite colony farms have flourished and grown. The colonies and their farms, which are home to between 60 and 160 residents, are largely self-sustaining, they maximize their resources, and they use the latest agricultural technology. The "corporate-like structure" of the Hutterite colonies, which has always been an essential element of the colonies, has made the Hutterites "sophisticated businesspeople, adroit at finding industry opportunities and building very competitive businesses for the good of their colonies" (Cobb 2006). The corporation Dakota Provisions, largely owned by 44 Hutterite colonies across South Dakota and Minnesota, opened in 2006, specializing in turkeys processing. The processing plant, located outside of Huron,

2 There is a discrepancy in Riley's two reports in terms of when the colonies expanded. Riley's 1969 collaboration states that the colonies had initially expanded by 1913 while his 1980 report lists the date as 1917. In addition, Riley states that 17 of the colonies had been founded by 1931 in his 1969 report, while his 1980 report gives the year as 1917.

illustrates the success and the presence of the Hutterite communities in South Dakota and in particular, Beadle County.

Hutterite colonies, although constructed by separate groups and at different times, share specific building types based on their communal traditions. Traditional buildings include dining halls and kitchen, long houses (dwellings or apartments), schools and churches, barns, and shops. These building traditions have continued and recently-constructed building share many of the same characteristics as the historic examples; however, with modern conveniences.

Of the colonies in Beadle County, two were listed in the NRHP in 1982 as part of a Multiple Property Documentation Form The Historic Hutterite Colonies (Stewart 1981). Millford Colony, the daughter colony of the original Lake Byron Colony, had not been entirely established before the migration to Canada in 1918. Five buildings remain extant from the colony, which are currently part of a private farm. Riverside Colony has three buildings, from the original Huron Colony that occupied the site prior to 1918, which are listed in the NRHP.

F. SOUTH DAKOTA STATE FAIR GROUNDS

Illustrating its prominence in the state, Huron became the permanent location of the South Dakota State Fair in 1905. The fair itself was established in 1885 by an act that created a Board of Agriculture for the Dakota Territory for the purpose of "forwarding the interests of agriculture, horticulture, manufacturing, and domestic arts." One of the main objectives of the board was to organize an annual exhibition of the territory's agricultural products. The larger towns in the territory competed to be the first location of the fair and between 1885 and 1888, Huron held the honor of being the location for the fair. In 1905, after South Dakota had been established as a state, Huron was chosen as the permanent location of the state fair.

The North Western deeded the State of South Dakota 85 acres of land in Huron for the fair grounds. At this time, the state purchased several building from the Central South Dakota Fair Association that were already located on the property (these buildings are no longer extant). With the growing population and the fair, the state purchased 65 adjoining acres in 1911. By 1912, the fair grounds had reached approximately 145 acres. The state acquired additional adjacent acreage in the 1970s, thus making current fairground site approximately 170 acres (Cahalan 1998). A number of buildings were constructed during the 1910s and 1920s; however, the majority have been demolished and replaced over the years as needs changed. In 1990, the Dairy Barn, now the Dakotaland Museum, was listed on the NRHP.

IV. RESULTS OF ARCHITECTURAL SURVEY

A. SURVEY RESULTS

The survey enumerated over 3,900 historic period properties throughout the county (Appendices A-L). Within the largely rural area, there were hundreds of early to mid-twentieth century farmsteads recorded. Many of the farmsteads had dense windbreaks and were not visible from the road. Approximately half of the farmhouses and barns that were surveyed have fallen subject to extensive alterations over time, including unsympathetic additions, changes to fenestration, installation of replacement windows, and the addition of synthetic siding. Many twentieth-century barns have been replaced with Morton sheds or pole barns.

There were also numerous schools surveyed within the towns and particularly the rural areas of the county. The buildings dated from the late nineteenth century to the mid twentieth century. Their condition ranged from good to very poor.

Within the towns, and cities there were a wide variety of residential architectural styles and periods from the late 19th century to the late twentieth century and a concentration of commercial buildings along their Main Streets. Huron was the largest town surveyed with over 2,900 properties identified within the city limits. Surveyed properties included a large number of residential, commercial properties in the downtown area and along major thoroughfares, religious properties, and schools. There are also a number of railroad properties surveyed on the north and east sides of town.

Most of the other towns in the county had a central commercial core, though some of the smaller towns such as Yale, Broadland, Virgil and Cavour had very few active commercial buildings. As a collection of buildings, few of these towns' remaining commercial buildings and houses retain enough integrity to constitute a cohesive historic district.

Most of the properties recorded during the survey, date from the late nineteenth century to the first half of the twentieth century. Most of the dwellings and barns are of wood frame construction. The most common dwelling types were the one- and one-and-a-half story cross-gable, gable-front or side-gable structures. Many of the barns surveyed were gable and gambrel roof types with only a handful of gothic-arch roof barns present in the county.

The survey encountered little variation in construction methods. Wood shingle, asphalt shingle, and metal were the most common types of roof cladding. Many dwellings had vinyl or aluminum siding, but most had clapboard siding. Other siding materials observed were asphalt and asbestos siding. After siding replacement, windows were often the next most obvious exterior alteration. Very few properties retained original wood frame sash with 2/2, 3/1 or 4/1 vertical divided lights. Most properties had 1/1 aluminum or vinyl frame replacement sash. Other exterior alterations usually included additions, extensions, and the enclosure or alteration of porches.

Throughout the county there were many abandoned early twentieth century dwellings and farmsteads; however, few were considered to have sufficient integrity or architectural merit for consideration as potentially eligible properties. An abandoned house on 377th Avenue near Hitchcock is one exception, being one of the earliest farmhouses that has a relatively good degree of integrity despite being abandoned (BE000-02863). There was also an abandoned stone building on 212th Street that may have some significance (BE000-03434). Many properties have lost their integrity of setting and location as they have been moved from their original location.

Properties selected as potentially eligible were chosen because they were significant examples of an architectural style or type of building, and for retaining a high degree of integrity, particularly in materials (including original siding, windows and doors) and setting.

Two hundred and forty-two properties throughout the county were initially identified as potentially eligible. Among the properties surveyed, the potentially eligible properties include two areas of expansion for the Campbell Park Historic District, two small residential districts to the west and south of the Campbell Park Historic District, numerous residential properties, eleven commercial properties, two railroad related properties, sixteen barns, eighteen farmsteads, six schools, one church, one bridge, four water towers, a cattle auction house, a roadside attraction, and other miscellaneous properties. Many of the residential properties displayed significant characteristics of a particular architectural style. Most of the other properties lack a specific architectural style. Specific information about the expansion of Campbell Park Historic District and other identified districts are outlined in the recommendations section below.

National Register Criteria A and C are the criteria most likely to be applicable to the properties in the county. Depending upon their location, whether it be rural or in town, they might be eligible for listing under Criterion A for their association with agricultural development at a local or state level, or for community development. Properties may also be eligible for listing under Criterion C as examples of distinctive building types that possess characteristics of demonstrable significance with respect to design, construction, or use of materials.

B. RECOMMENDATIONS

Campbell Park Historic District (BE001)

The Campbell Park Historic District was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1974 under Criteria A and C with a period of significance from 1895 to 1915 (Table 2). Survey of the historic district revealed that a number changes to structures had taken place including the application of synethic siding and replacement of windows. Eight properties are no longer extant. Several buildings within the district should technically be categorized as non-contributing because they fall outside the period of significance. However, many of the buildings are considered contributing by the Huron Historic Preservation Commission.

Survey of surrounding properties indicate that the Campbell Park Historic District could be expanded to include the 900 block of Dakota Avenue S and houses between Wisconsin Avenue SW, Illinois Avenue SW, 6th Street SW, and 8th Street SW (see Table 2; Figure 3). Houses within these areas have a moderate to high degree of integrity and generally date from the late nineteenth to early twentieth century (Appendix A).

Residential Historic Districts

The architectural survey in Huron revealed the potential for two additional residential historic districts. One of the districts consists of houses in the 1000-1300 blocks of Illinois Avenue SW and Wisconsin Avenue SW and the west side of Dakota between 10th and 12th Streets SW (Table 3). Houses within the district have a moderate to a high degree of integrity and date to the early decades of the twentieth century (Appendix A). The second potential district includes the 600-800 blocks of Nebraska and Colorado Avenues SW, just west of the former Huron College Campus (Table 4). Again the houses in this area date to the early to mid part of the twentieth century (Appendix A).

Railroad Historic District

In August 2000, the South Dakota State Historic Preservation Office concurred with the Dakota, Minnesota, and Eastern Railroad Corporation's determination that the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad line from Winona, Minnesota to Wall, South Dakota that runs through Huron was eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places as a linear historic district. An Historic District Treatment Plan for the historic district, prepared by HDR Engineering Inc., is currently being reviewed by both the Minnesota and South Dakota State Historic Preservation Offices. Though none of the railroad related properties in Huron were specifically mentioned in the Historic District Treatment Plan, this architectural survey identified several properties that should be considered as contributing elements in that district including a railroad bridge (BE000-01845), the freight/passenger depot in Huron (BE000-00928), and the National Register listed CN&W Roundhouse (BE000-00025) and Passenger Depot (825) (Appendix A).

Downtown Historic District (BE002)

Architectural survey results of the downtown business district of Huron indicate that there is not sufficient integrity to warrant a National Register historic district. Many of the buildings have been clad with modern materials and/or windows enclosed or replaced. There are modern structures within the district that disrupt the continuity of historic period buildings.

Thematic Studies and Multiple Property Documents

There are several thematic studies and intensive surveys using Multiple Property Documentation Forms that would increase the understanding of the built environment in Beadle County. As there are numerous extant rural schools in the county, Berger recommends that an intensive survey of schools be conducted to ascertain their significance to the history of education in the county (Appendix A).

Numerous homes and buildings in Huron including the City Hall were built by local contractor, Gustave Jacobsen. Many of the homes display similar characteristics and most are recommended as eligible for inclusion in the National Register. Berger recommends that a Multiple Property Document or a thematic study be conducted on the architecture and buildings of Gustave Jacobsen to ascertain the significance of the contractor's contribution to the built environment of Huron and Beadle County as a whole.

Rural/Town Properties

The properties listed in Table 5 represent properties in the county and in the smaller towns that retain sufficient historic fabric and/or architectural significance to be considered potentially eligible. Intensive-level study of farmsteads such as the Wyld Farm (BE026), Tschetter Farm (BE077-00001) and the Farm on 196th Street (BE075-00001) that illustrate the prosperity of rural farming is warranted.
