THE BEAR BIBLIOGRAPHY
USERS' MANUAL

INTRODUCTION

The Bear Bibliography Project grew from mutual recognition by the Alaska Cooperative Park Studies Unit and the U.S. National Park Service of interest, need, and capability. The National Park Service is responsible for the preservation of both remnant and essentially undisturbed populations of brown and black bears and for the management of bear-human interactions in NPS areas. Thus the Service is faced with an obvious need for thorough and efficient control of the available information on bears. The science programs in several National Park Service administrative units have cooperated in supporting this project. The Pacific Northwest Region underwrote the principal costs of the project's first phase. The Rocky Mountain Region, the Washington, D.C. office, and the Western Region have all made significant contributions. The University of Alaska added substantially to the computer services budget, and the National Wildlife Federation provided some financial support. Other agencies and individuals concerned with bear biology and management have contributed in one way or another. These are acknowledged more specifically later.

Bear research has mushroomed since the mid-1950's, and many of the available monographs and bibliographies are limited and dated. However, these works provided a valuable base for the present effort, and they are listed in the Search Coverage section below.

Since 1954 the number of researchers and resource managers working with bears has expanded tremendously. The Bear Biology Association was formed in the 1970's. There have been five international conferences on bear biology and management, and several conferences and workshops have been held dealing with American black bears. There have been frequent meetings of the groups working on brown bears in the western states and provinces. In addition, research on bears outside North America has followed pace as a result of spreading interest in bears in general and the development of techniques for working with the animals.

The Alaska Cooperative Park Studies Unit (ACPSU) proposed to conduct an exhaustive, synthetic, and computerized bibliographic project concentrating initially on Ursus arctos on a worldwide basis and Ursus americanus. (We hope that the effort can be expanded eventually to include the rest of the bears of the world.) The ACPSU had special interest in and capability for this project. Dean had been involved in brown bear studies since 1957 and had accumulated extensive bibliographic materials. Several graduate students at the Unit, including Tracy, had studied various aspects of bear ecology. Additionally, the U.S. Forest Service's FAMULUS programs were being used on the University of Alaska's Computer Network for the production and control of bibliographies. The ACPSU had considerable experience with this family of programs. Thus, there seemed to be opportune coincidence of need, experience, and means to make significant progress on the project. Work on the first contract for this project started in September 1976; details of project funding are available in Dean and Tracy (1982).

PROJECT PERSONNEL

Principal Investigator	Frederick C. Dean
Research Associate	Diane M. Tracy
Administrative Assistants	Candy M. Anderson, Teresa M. Jordan
Data Control Clerk	Lori Quakenbush
Student Assistants	Harry H. Brown, David B. Christie, Matthew M. Reid

Tracy has done a substantial amount of searching, essentially all of the verification, and all keyword assignment. She also did library work during trips to Missoula, Montana, and Washington, D.C.

Anderson and Jordan handled most data entry, computer file proofing with many authors, and most of the file manipulation, as well as all typing associated with the project. Quakenbush assisted in data entry.

Brown and Christie both did searches for bear literature citations as part of a course requirement during the fall of 1976; these were volunteer projects. Later Brown was hired to screen literature lists for citations not included in our files and to code references in FAMULUS format. We were eventually able to eliminate most of the pre-entry coding through the acquisition of a position indicator for the terminal. Reid verified citations and located copies of papers during the brief period that he was employed on the project.

Dean has largely been involved with general supervision, layout of the computer procedures, preparation of papers and demonstrations given at conferences, solicitation of assistance from colleagues, and writing proposals and reports.

METHODS AND USER INSTRUCTIONS

The preparation of this bibliography was aided by a substantial data base that had been accumulated by Dean over a period of many years. This included several past bibliographic efforts cited in our search statement. Since 1966 Dean has received weekly "ASCA" profile reports from the Institute of Scientific Information; these have been designed to yield bear references. Beginning in 1968 he received searches of the American Society of Mammalogists publication "Recent Literature of Mammalogy." Prior to 1966 Dean had collected bear references and citations in more or less standard fashion in connection with ecological studies of bears in Alaska.

The search strategy and our bibliographic priorities are defined more specifically below. Hopefully these specifications will help provide users of the bibliography with an understanding of its current strengths, weaknesses, and boundaries. This should not only provide calibration with respect to the confidence one might have in the bibliography but should also minimize redundant effort or gaps associated with continuing bibliographic work in this field.

We have proceeded using the basic tenet that attempts to anticipate too exactly the interests of others now or in the future are likely to result in a high level of error. Such error, resulting in the exclusion of certain references from the bibliography because we consider them of low value, could be unfortunate for the worker who is proceeding along lines we might fail to anticipate. Therefore we have used rather broad criteria in deciding on questions of inclusion. The user, hopefully, will appreciate the increased confidence that ultimately may be placed in this collection as a relatively exhaustive source. This approach does imply a greater expenditure of energy by the user in rejecting material that is of low value or useless in relation to specific interests. The detailed level of keyword assignment with qualifiers should make the index effective. In addition, a powerful feature of the FAMULUS computer search programs is the possibility of designing searches with logical additions or substractions; this can be done even on a multi-field (author. date, title, etc.) basis. Consequently, careful search design by users working with either the index or the computer search program will substantially reduce hand-sorting as an elimination technique.

The user of the bibliography should recognize that several major steps are involved in processing citations: (1) finding an item in the formal or informal literature and including it in the master card file; (b) obtaining or at least seeing an original or valid copy; (c) verification of the citation information; (d) determination of appropriate keyword descriptors; and (e) incorporation of the citation in the computer files. There is no rigidly prescribed sequence that must be followed past the initial step. Although it would be ideal if each citation could be verified and assigned keywords by actually seeing the text prior to incorporation in the computer files, this would result in an unacceptably slow rate of providing access to potentially useful material. This is especially true since FAMULUS permits searches for selected words or characteristics in any of the several fields, regardless of whether or not all fields have been completed for any given citation. Thus we have elected to incorporate citations in the computer files which we have not verified; this status is clearly indicated. Likewise, entries for many have keywords assigned only from the title or an abstract. Some entries, based on incomplete citations, even have missing data such as page numbers or volume numbers. As funding becomes available, work will progress to clean up items with missing data and to correct errors.

Bibliography Priorities

Bibliographic work is frustratingly open-ended. Since we recognized the impossibility of achieving, within the contract terms, total control of bear literature on the ultimately desirable scale, we initially established the priorities noted below.

Species

Brown bear (Ursus arctos) and American black bear (Ursus americanus) received priority over other species with respect to searching, although much of the search strategy was designed to be effective with respect to all members of the bear family. When references to other species of bears were found, they were recorded, but special efforts were not made to search for such material at this initial stage. Similarly recent species received priority over fossil species.

Geographic Coverage

Priority was given to material dealing with North America. Although citations on brown bears were included in the active file regardless of locale, the relative intensity of our effort at searching, assigning keywords, and computer storage decreased with respect to other continents.

Time Coverage

Priority has been given to recent materials: there has been a general working back in time.

Publication Status

Formally published material has probably had a better chance of inclusion than unpublished items simply because it is easier to locate. Considerable effort was made to locate relevant unpublished materials as can be seen from the search statement below. These have been included with the understanding that they will not be cited without specific permission obtained from the authors.

Language

Material written in English has been given highest priority; however, attempts are being made to achieve good coverage of appropriate material in other languages. German, French, Russian, Japanese, and Scandinavian sources have received greater attention than other non-English possibilities.

Type of Material

Highest priority has been accorded scientific publications and other technical text material even if unpublished. Popular materials and photographs have, at times, been included; but the treatment of these categories has been very uneven and often simply opportunistic. We have endeavored to include any material, even popular or news accounts, that seemed to have potential interest to or possibility of use by persons engaged in the study or management of bears. In general, hunting stories without specific information beyond the fact of a hunt have been excluded.

Search Coverage

It is frequently difficult or impossible for the user of a bibliography to gain real understanding of the literature base that has been covered, what means were employed to do the job, and just where and how to extend an existing list without risking a substantial overlap or, conversely, gap in the cumulative search pattern. Hatler (1964) provided a rather specific statement of what and how he searched. We will endeavor to define the search base and strategy used for this project, although an entirely specific description is impossible due to the second- and third-generation character of major segments of the current product.

References for all species of bears encountered in the following lists have been incorporated in our master card file. Readers are reminded that the master file is much more inclusive than the current computer files; in a strict sense the search statement pertains to the former.

Couturier (1954) (A substantial number, but not all of the non-English titles have been translated.)
Tigner and Gilbert (1960)
Hatler (1964)
U.S. Department of Interior and University of Alaska (1966)
Bray and Barnes (1967)
Mundy (1971)
Eagar and Stafford (1974)
Jones and Jones (1976)
Lloyd and Bunnell (1977)
Kendall (1977)
Tietje and Ruff (1977)

Major reference collections were made available by:

Jerry Rothman	(November 1976)
Victor H. Cahalane	(September 1977)
Lynn L. Rogers	(September 1977)
Charles J. Jonkel	(March 1978)
Robert B. Weeden	(Relative to Yellowstone N.P.)
Bear Biology Association	(Continuing)

In addition the following aids have been examined as noted.

Recent Literature of Mammalogy (American Society of Mammalogists). Searched, for the period 1968-August 1979, for all references pertaining to members of the Family Ursidae, using the citation retrieval system described by Anderson and Van Gelder (1970) which covers contents as well as titles. Although Anderson and Van Gelder (1970) describe many aspects of their literature control system. they do not include a source journal list; they do state that the coverage is very similar to that of Zoological Record (but with less time lag). They also provide some evidence that coverage of Recent Literature of Mammalogy is more extensive than Biological Abstracts, the Institute of Scientific Information, and Wildlife Review in its search base. Unfortunately, increasing costs forced the Society to discontinue the citation retrieval service in August 1979. Since that time Recent Literature in Mammalogy has been hand-searched on the basis of titles. Incorporation of citations from this source is not uniformly up to date since 1979.

Biological Abstracts (BioScience Information Service, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania). The mid-1930's-1975 period was covered by a search made by Biological Information Service, Los Angeles, California; the search was aimed at the genus Ursus. The period 1953-1963, subject indices, term: "bear" (see Hatler, 1964). The period 1953-1959, systematic index, term: "Ursus" (see Hatler, 1964); note that certain indices to Biological Abstracts are discontinuous. The period 1963-mid-1976 (volume 61), subject and systematic indices as appropriate, terms: bear, bears, Ursus, Ursidae.

BioResearch Index (BioScience Information Service, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania). The period 1965-mid-1976, terms: bear, bears, Ursus, Ursidae.

Zoological Record (Zoological Society of London, London, England). Volumes 84-106, systematic index checked for Ursidae. Also covered to an unknown extent by Biological Information Service.

Institute of Scientific Information Data Base (ISI, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania). The period from September 1966 through April 1981 has been checked thoroughly. The more significant items encountered since that time have been incorporated. ASCA profile including: words -- bear, bears, Ursus; cited authors -- Craighead, Kurten, Pulliainen, Rausch, Lentfer; and books -- Murie (1944), Couturier (1954).

Wildlife Review (U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife). Issues numbers 1-182, using Wildlife Abstracts in part, terms: bear, bears, Carnivore/Bear section, and (for 1964-1969) Parasites and Disease section for mammals was scanned.

Fish and Wildlife Reference Service, Denver, Colorado. The results of a search done for the Canadian Wildlife Service in 1975 and a new one done for us in February 1977 are included. These searches are based on a library of selected publications produced in connection with the Federal Aid in Fish and Wildlife Restoration programs ("Dingell-Johnson" and "Pittman-Robertson" programs), reports from the Anadromous Sport Fish Conservation program, some graduate theses and dissertations, and some publications from Cooperative Research Units (Anon, 1977). (Note that we sent letters to members of the Bear Biology Association in part as an attempt to gain more complete coverage of unpublished progress and completion reports than is available through the FWRS.)

Arctic Bibliography (Arctic Institute of North America). Volumes 1-16, term: bear.

University of Alaska Wildlife Reprint Collection (University of Alaska, Fairbanks). Termatrex catalog of some 8,000 reprints, systematic index, term: Ursidae.

See also Hatler's (1964) entire list of material searched for less comprehensive items.

Alaska Resources Library (Anchorage). In December 1977, Martha Shephard of the Alaska Resources Library ran computer searches of the following information sources:

National Technical Information Service
Term: bear.

Smithsonian Science Information Exchange
This was repeated in mid-1981.
Search using S.D.S.'s "Orbit," term: bear.

Comprehensive Dissertation Abstracts
Terms: bear, bears, Ursus, Ursidae.

Library of Congress (Washington, D.C.). Card catalog. Terms: bear, bears, Ursidae.

In addition to the structured searching noted above, we have used the reference lists in all papers that we have seen personally; however, references on fossil forms in Erdbrink (1953) have not yet been added to our master file. Dean wrote a letter to the nearly 80 members of the Bear Biology Association in early November 1976. The project was explained, and recipients were asked to provide lists of published and unpublished material, especially their own or their agency's. In response, we received a tremendous amount of assistance; the reader is referred to the Acknowledgements section for more details. Important contributions were received from many parts of the U.S., Canada, Japan, and the U.S.S.R.

Computerization

Famulus Programs

We have made use of a set of programs called FAMULUS (Anon, 1969; Burton, Russell, and Yerke, 1969; Anon, 1975; Anon, 1976; Batty, 1981) for computerizing the bibliography. This set of eight programs allows extremely powerful control of the process of file creation and manipulation. The users of the bibliography are not required to learn the details of creation and manipulation of files containing the bibliography. However, some users may wish to order custom searches or to purchase copies of the bibliographies on magnetic tape for use at other installations. Readers expecting to work first-hand with our bear bibliography on the University of Alaska Computer Network should make use of the Network's FAMULUS "Explain Files" since some of the subsystem names have been changed and specific control statements and procedures are required. A copy of the Explain Files, some notes on search procedure, and examples of control command program files that will ease use of the bibliographies on the UACN may be obtained from the Biology and Resource Management Program. Alaska Cooperative Park Studies Unit.

Citation Format

We have endeavored to follow the CBE Style Manual (Council of Biology Editors, Committee on Form and Style, 1972) to a considerable extent in formatting the citations. However, we have tended to include more information and fewer abbreviations than suggested by that guide. The requirements associated with inter-library retrieval requests frequently exceed minimal citation documentation.

In creating the FAMULUS file we have specified eight separate fields: Author (AU); Date (DA); Title (TI); Publication (PU); Characteristics (CS); Keyword (KW); Abstract (AB), and one extra reserved for possible future use. The abstract field is also currently unused; however, it is more difficult to add fields to an existing file than it is to provide for their possible use, assuming storage space is available. Comments on the contents of several of these fields are given below.

Date - This field contains the date of publication.

Title - Foreign language titles have been translated to English. In the face of time and budget restraints, many of the translations have been done by Tracy. She offers apologies to authors and users alike for inadequacies. We would appreciate any translating assistance users could give us in the future.

Publication - This field includes such information as the journal name, volume number, and page in the case of an article in a periodical or the name and address of a book publisher and the number of pages in the book. Some citations also include page numbers in parentheses which refer to the pages on which bear information occurs. Where abbreviations of publication names are used we have followed BIOSIS (1974).

Characteristics - This field contains the number of references cited in the item. the language of the text and possibly alternate language abstracts, and the location of at least one hard copy if this is known. The following abbreviations have been used to denote hard copy collections:

BBA = Bear Biology Association Collection*
DMT = Diane M. Tracy Collection*
FCD = Frederick C. Dean Collection*
FWS = Fish and Wildlife Reference Service Library, Denver, CO
LC = Library of Congress
RBW = Robert B. Weeden Collection*

The collections marked with an * are accessible through the Alaska Cooperative Park Studies Unit. Some copies of references can be supplied at cost to bibliography users who have not been able to locate them through traditional sources. Copies of unpublished materials will be supplied only with the author's permission.

The Characteristics field also indicates by use of the term "unverified" those citations that we have not personally checked for accuracy; the term does not imply a quality judgement or that the citation as given is incorrect, but rather provides a warning that users should check the information carefully. Conversely, those citations without "unverified" have been checked by members of the project staff. (All citations have been proofed after data entry, but we cannot guarantee the total absence of errors.) As the process of verification is completed, the term "unverified" will be deleted from the citation in question.

Keywords - The terms used as keywords have been derived from a subject term thesaurus developed for use in the library of the Program in Wildlife Management at the University of Alaska. This list was compiled by drawing from the subject index of Wildlife Abstracts; the Thesaurus of Sport Fish and Wildlife Descriptors (U.S. Department of Interior Library and Conservation Library Center, 1968); a thesaurus used at one time by the Aquatic Sciences Information Retrieval Center, University of Rhode Island; and a screening of articles in about 20 ecological and wildlife resource-related journals. The thesaurus has been in use in our reprint library for a period of several years and appears generally useful. There is an obvious need to stop somewhere in the description process, especially when dealing with general collections. In the case of the bear bibliographies we have added some additional terms that are of specific use with respect to bear literature. The total number of keywords used is between 750 and 800 and is unlikely to be expanded significantly. We have considered, and sometimes used, terms suggested by a number of colleagues; however, it is impossible to carry the description process to a level that will satisfy the specialist. Changing or adding terms has been kept to a minimum as work has progressed.

Knowledge of several facts about the keywords should help users get the most use from the keywords and the keyword index. These facts are listed and discussed below. Terms mentioned that were actually used as keywords are underlined.

1. Keywording intensity and Title, Abstract

About 40% of the citations were assigned keywords in great detail by reading or scanning the actual publication. More recent and major papers are more likely to have been read than older or minor papers. The rest of the citations were given keywords from what could be inferred from the titles or abstracts. In these cases the terms Title or Abstract appear as keywords to alert the user that the citation was not read when keywords were assigned. These citations may include much more information and actually cover many more keywords than could be inferred from the title. If this material is eventually checked first-hand, corrections or additions may be made and incorporated in a supplement.

2. Broad and narrow keywords

The use of the thesaurus allowed keywords to be consistently assigned in a hierarchical manner, with a group of narrow terms nearly always accompanied by a broad term. Thus the narrow terms Population abundance, Population structure, and Reproduction are all accompanied by the broad term Population ecology. Population structure may be further detailed by the terms Age structure and Sex ratio. Users of the bibliography are cautioned to minimize the risk of information loss by designing searches in an inclusive manner. Some hand-sorting must be expected.

3. Qualifier numbers 1, 2, 3

In order to assist in the reduction of hand-sorting without exposing the user to undue risk of losing information, Tracy qualified the keywords with an indicator of the importance of a given reference with respect to that specific keyword. The qualifiers indicate: 1 - contains a major contribution to the subject; 2 - contains significant data or ideas on the subject but not a major contribution; 3 - contains minor or peripheral information on the subject. Assigning a qualifier is a subjective judgment which is not always consistent and with which users will probably disagree at times. Also, since many citations were classified on the basis of titles or abstracts, in these cases the qualifiers are generally only helpful in indicating a major paper on a given subject. Thus, the qualifiers are only a preliminary guide. Individual users may find papers of importance to them in all three categories.

4. Geographic location

Keywords were used to indicate geographic location as specifically as possible. In most cases a series of location keywords was assigned to each citation, progressing from broad to narrow, for example: North America, United States, California, Yosemite National Park. However, if a citation included dozens of locations or the location was not obvious, then the broader location keywords were qualified with a T, indicating the total area or some major part of it, for example United States T. In these cases the narrower location terms were not used. Thus, if a user wished to try to find most of the citations dealing with California, he should look not only under California, but also United States T, North America T, and World T. Some narrow location keywords, especially the names of national forests, were used only when they were named in a publication that was read. It was found that many publications on research conducted in national forests did not give the name of the forest. Users interested in national parks should use the keyword National parks (general) as well as the name of the specific park of interest.

5. General publications

Some publications, especially major books, covered so many subjects and were so lengthy that time was not taken to assign hundreds of keywords to them. Instead the keyword General was used. Users interested in any subject should look at the citations listed under General.

6. Explanations of specific keywords

Most of the keywords are self-explanatory. However, a few of the keywords will be more useful if a short explanation is given. These are listed and explained below:

Age - means information is given that has been separated by the age of the animals.

Agriculture - refers to crops, see also Livestock and Bees.

Annual - Usually refers to Activity patterns.

Attacks - refers to attacks by bears on humans, including minor scratches and bites.

Avoidance - generally refers to bear behavior in avoiding other bears, humans, or human developments.

Blood - includes hematology.

Campgrounds and roadsides - also includes camping away from roads.

Chemical elements - includes chemical compounds.

Control - generally refers to the control of bear depredations, especially control by the killing of bears, see also Deterrents and Relocation.

Circus - includes references on the taming and training of captive bears, see also Captivity and Care in captivity.

Consumption - refers to amounts of food consumed by bears.

Courtship - this keyword was not used consistently, see also Pairing.

Daily - usually refers to Activity patterns.

Decrease, Increase, Stable - each refers to population fluctuations.

Depredations - see also Attacks.

Digestive system - this keyword and others dealing with body parts refer to the physiology and function as well as the anatomy of the system.

Dimorphism - this keyword was not used consistently, see also Physical characteristics, especially when accompanied by the keyword Sex.

Distance - refers to distance of movements, see also Home range.

Ears, Eyes, Nose - these keywords refer not only to the organs, but also to the senses of hearing, sight, and smell, see also Olfactory.

Endangered - includes "threatened."

Extinction (local) - used for "extirpation."

Extirpation - not used as a keyword, see Extinction (local).

Fruits - refers to a part of the diet, also includes flowers, catkins, etc., but not mast, see also Mast.

Fur - see also Hides.

Hematology - not used as a keyword, see Blood.

Human flesh - refers to bears feeding on human flesh.

Hunting - used only for hunting techniques and hunting stories, see also Management, Harvest, and Laws and regulations.

Islands - this keyword was not consistently used.

Juvenile - refers to publications written for juvenile readers.

Mammary glands - used very generally so that it covers lactation and nursing, see also Milk.

Manipulation - refers to the manipulative ability of bears.

Measurements - refers to measurements of the physical characteristics of bears, does not include measurements of dens.

Modeling - refers to modeling, other than population modeling, as a research or management technique, see also Population modeling.

Morphology - see also Physical characteristics.

Nursing - not used as a keyword, see Parental care, Mammary glands, and Milk.

Observations - refers to observation as a research technique, especially detailed observations of behavior.

Pairing - refers to the forming of male-female pairs for reproduction, see also Courtship and Copulation.

Parts of body - a very broad term that refers to all references where parts of the body are discussed.

Popular - refers to popular literature, but this keyword was used quite sparingly and was not used for publications such as fish and game department magazines.

Population distribution - refers to a more detailed discussion of the distribution of a population in a given area than a simple statement of range, but does not refer to individual spacing, see also Range and Spatial patterns of distribution.

Range - refers to distribution in a very general sense, see also Population distribution.

Regional fauna - refers to papers which discuss all or a segment of the fauna of an area and not just bears.

Reintroduction - includes also introductions to areas not formerly occupied.

Remnant populations - for brown bears see also key U.S. locations such as Idaho, Montana, Wyoming and Yellowstone National Park because this keyword was not used for all citations covering these locations.

Remote sensing - refers to remote sensing techniques other than the use of telemetry to monitor movements, see also Telemetry.

Sex - means information is given that has been separated by the sex of the animals.

Skeleton - used for bones other than the skull, see also Skull.

Spatial patterns of distribution - refers to spacing of individuals, see also Home range and Territory.

Surveys - refers to the use of questionaires and interviews as research techniques.

Telemetry - refers to the use of telemetry to monitor movements, unless accompanied by the keyword Remote sensing, in which case Telemetry may also refer to the monitoring of physiological parameters such as Heart rate or Temperature (body).

Tracking - refers chiefly to the use of tracks as a censusing technique.

Trapping - includes both steel leg-hold traps and culvert traps.

The following keywords appear in a truncated form in the keyword index and vocabulary listings. Altering the FAMULUS program to allow for increased lengths of keywords would have resulted in considerable cost. Therefore, we have simply listed those few occurrences below.

ALEUTIAN ISLANDS NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE 2
KLONDIKE GOLD RUSH INTERNATIONAL HISTORIC PARK 2
PARC NATIONAL DES PYRENEES OCCIDENTALES 1
RUSSIAN SOVIET FEDERATED SOCIALIST REPUBLIC 2
WHITE RUSSIAN SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLIC 2

Subject Index

The keywords discussed above were used to produce a subject index. This index should be a very useful guide to the literature. Hand-searches, even involving logical constructs (see Computer Searches section below), can be done on the keyword field using the index. However, the user should remember that many citations were given keywords based on the titles so that not all subjects discussed in the reference were known.

Author Index

An author index has been produced to allow the location of all citations by a given author, whether he was a first author or not.

Vocabulary

A vocabulary list of all words used in the title and keyword fields has been produced. This list will be useful to users trying to construct search statements for computer searches of the bibliography.

Computer Searches

Custom computer searches on the bibliography can be done on the University of Alaska Computer Network by either ACPSU personnel or bibliography users themselves. The search results in a computer printout listing only the citations desired. Potential users are urged to study the FAMULUS manuals before designing searches themselves. If users will be requesting searches on a service basis, they should make use of the search criteria sheet that will be provided by ACPSU on request. Searches may be made in one or more specified fields using single author names or subject terms or names, dates, and terms in many combinations. For example, letting letters represent imaginary names, dates, or terms, the following are some possible combinations.

A
A and B
A or B
A and (either B or C)
(A and (B and C)) or (A and (B and D))
(A or B or C or D) and (E and F)
A but not (A and B)
All references published in the 1960's (ten-year scan)

Obviously, the possible combinations of fields and term strategies are exceedingly numerous. Effective searching will require thought and planning as well as knowledge of the available term list. The lists of terms that may be used for searching at present may be found in the vocabulary lists drawn from the title and keyword fields.

It will be best if users can present explicit requests after examining the vocabulary lists; however, we will attempt to prepare search statements from general descriptions of what is wanted and (importantly) not wanted. Search requests will be reviewed by someone familiar with the thesaurus; if there is any question about the desired strategy, the requestor will be contacted.

Users with access to the University of Alaska Computer Network, either by means of direct connection or via a terminal plus telephone link, may do their own searching. A full set of FAMULUS control programs has been prepared for use on UACN; these give read access to public copies of the tapes. Copies are obtainable from ACPSU.

Present Status of the Bibliographies

The final status of what we have termed the "maintenance" edition of these bibliographies is summarizable as follows. There are over 4100 citations in the brown bear bibliography and 3500 in the black bear bibliography; some are duplicates between the two. About 40% have been assigned keywords by reading or scanning the actual text; the rest have been assigned keywords on the basis of the title or an abstract. Most major recent publications originating in the U.S.A. have been verified by project personnel. The master card files contain approximately 4000 additional citations; about 1500 of these refer to brown or American black bears. The rest refer to other species, especially polar bears. The kinds of brown and black bear items in the card files that are not in the computer files rank (decreasing by frequency) as follows:

1. Untranslated non-English titles - many older brief items, but a significant number of recent Japanese works as well.
2. Citations for which relevancy to bears is questionable.
3. Citations dealing with bears of uncertain species.
4. Incomplete citations.
5. Historical and exploration accounts.
6. Material published for juvenile readers.

Subject to funding availability, we hope to continue work on the project. We will attempt to produce periodic supplements updating the present bibliographies. We will also continue work on verifying and providing detailed keywords for citations already in the computer files. Users could be of great assistance to us and other users by providing: 1) citations and copies of their new publications and project reports as they come out, 2) notifying us of errors in the present bibliographies, and 3) volunteering to translate foreign language titles.

AVAILABILITY OF THE BIBLIOGRAPHIES

The bibliographies are available as:

1. conventional hard-copy of the complete files in book format or in the form of computer printer output;

2. microfiche;

3. custom computer searches conducted over files on the University of Alaska Computer Network by either ACPSU personnel or bibliography users themselves; and

4. copies of the FAMULUS files on user-supplied magnetic tapes.

A price list is available from the Alaska Cooperative Park Studies Unit. Potential users will want to consider the nature of their use, its potential frequency, the cost of different means of use, the availability of microfiche readers, the cost of transferring files, etc.

IMPORTANT NOTE

Please remember that unpublished material has been included with the understanding that it will not be cited without specific permission obtained from the author(s).
